ART. II. Philippine Islands: their discovery by F. de Magellan; and a brief narrative of the first under his command, including some particulars respecting his death.

concluded from our last.

The followers of this able leader mourned over his untimely death. His successful guidance of them seemed to have fixed on him their entire confidence, and perhaps this affection led them to elect his cousin Duarte Barbosa to be their commander in his stead. A still heavier stroke now awaited the expedition, in the defection and perfidy of the king of Zebu. He joined, perhaps sincerely, in the lamentations of the Spaniards for the loss of their chief, but soon after conceived the purpose which plunged them in still deeper grief. Pretending that he had prepared his presents for the king of Spain, and would show them to the bearers, he invited Barbosa and twenty-five of his officers to a feast. Serrano only distrusted the designs of the king. His fears were ridiculed, and the taunts of his comrades induced him to go with them to the shore. In the midst of their festivity, a band of armed men rushed upon them and put them to death. Serrano only was promised his life, if he would ransom it by two cannons. Bound and wounded he was carried to the shore, and besought his companions to pay the ransom and save him from death. They replied by weighing anchor and hoisting sail. Before they were out of hearing, the angry shouts of the natives told them that Serrano was added to the number of the slain. Looking back once more to the spot where Magellan had planted the cross, they saw it miraculously supported, so that, with all the efforts of the natives, it could not be overthrown.

The loss of so many of their best men left the survivors too weak to form three crews. The Santiago was therefore burned, and the Victoria and Trinidad pursued their course, Juan Caravallo having been chosen to the chief command. It is not clear what route was pursued from Zebu to Tidore. Probably the two ships steered southwest again, around the western coast of Mindanao. Their first stopping-place was at Paluan, where they were well received. Leaving this friendly port, they were conducted to a large city or town, which they call Borney, but which their probable position hardly permits us to regard as the modern Borneo, on the northwest coast of the island of that name. More probably it was one of the capitals of Mindanao. On approaching Borney, they met with some of the officers of the king, through whom they forwarded presents, which were well received. The envoys, which they sent to court, at the king's request, were met by an escort of 2000 men, having bows and spears, with an elephant in their train. They were conducted to the palace, and their replies communicated by a tube, passing through the wall of the apartment, to the royal ear. They were dismissed with presents, and on their return informed their commander, that the city was large and the people numerous, and that, in their opinion, they had better be gone. It was, however, necessary to send once more to the city for some naval stores, and the five men dispatched on this service, did not return. The Spaniards then seized some hostages, and sent a message to the king, that they would burn his vessels and kill his people, if their comrades were not restored. Two of them then returned to the ships, but all their efforts being unavailing to effect the restoration of the other three men, they at length set sail, leaving them behind.

Finding soon after a convenient port, they careened their vessels, and deposing Caravallo, elected Gonsalo Gomez de Espinosa to the command in his stead. Embarking again, they captured the prahu of the chief of Paluan, but remembering that they had been well treated in his island, they released him again. Meeting with a prahu, which showed some hostile signals, near the island 'Quespid,' they boarded her, killing twenty, and capturing thirty, men. The pilot of this prahu, denied that he knew the way to the Moluccas, but offered to take them to two islands where they would find cloves. When near the two islands, a chief came on board, who promised to carry them to the Moluccas, but finding his brother, in the captive pilot, he became alarmed and attempted to escape. Seized again, and confined in irons, the two brothers were required to act as pilots, but they soon effected their escape, by throwing themselves overboard in the night. One of the thirty prisoners now told his masters that the Moluccas were 100 leagues distant, and following his directions, they entered, the 8th of November, the port of Tidore. Almansor, king of Tidore, visited them, wearing a shirt embroidered with gold, a white dress which came down to his feet, and a silk turban or veil. He gave them a friendly welcome, the smell of their bacon, meanwhile, obliging him to hold his nose. The Spaniards made him a profound obeisance, and offered him a chair covered with crimson velvet, a yellow velvet gown, a coat of gold, four yards of scarlet cloth, a piece of yellow damask, a piece of linen, a golden worked handkerchief, two glass cups, some beads, knives, &c. Other presents were given to the son of the king and to the chiefs. Their petition for permission to trade was then granted, along with authority to kill all who should do them harm. The royal standard, arms, and portrait, were then shown to Almansor, who admired them much, and moreover told them that he had discovered some time before, by means of astrology, that Christians were coming to purchase spices, and that he had prepared for them permission to trade.

The sad fate of their companions at Zebu was not yet out of the memories of the Spaniards, and they did not forget precautions while refreshing themselves on shore. The natives finding them ignorant of the prices of cloves, attempted to impose on them, and they again appealed to the king. His authority procured for them cargoes, on fair terms, and he further engaged that he would ever be friendly to the Spanish crown, and admit its subjects to a free trade. The Spaniards paid for their cargoes in linen, silks, and cloths, and presented Almansor with [illegible] captives, as slaves. [illegible] of the Spaniards had [illegible] king of Tidore [illegible] them [illegible] and [illegible] the customs of Castile. [illegible] now ready to sail, and some young Tidoreans, who had offered to accompany them, were taken on board. At this moment, it was discovered that the Trinidad required extensive repairs. It was therefore agreed, that the Victoria, under the command of Juan Sebastian Cano, should carry to Europe the most valuable part of the cargo, the royal letters, &c., by the way of the Cape of Good Hope, and that the Trinidad, after being refitted, should sail direct for Panama, whence her cargo could be carried across the isthmus, and so to Spain.

The Victoria proceeded on her voyage early in 1522. Some lives were soon after lost in quarrels, and the failure of provisions thinned the number of her crew. After great sufferings, they reached the Cape de Verde islands, but the Portuguese governor imprisoned the men who were sent for provisions, and attempted to seize the Ship. Cano escaped, and after further suffering, reached San Lucas, the 6th of September, 1522. Bareheaded and and barefooted, the eighteen survivors of this voyage went in procession [illegible], with candles in their hands, to render thanks to God. The news soon reached the court, and Cano was commanded to repair thither with some of his companions, his charts, &c. They were received with marked distinction by the king, a pension of 500 ducats was bestowed on Cano, with a coat of arms, and a globe with the device "primus circumdedisti me." Pensions were also granted to his officers, and a fourth of the royal twentieths distributed among the crew. The men who had been seized at the Cape de Verde islands, and sent thence to Portugal, were delivered up, on the demand of the king. The Victoria discharged 433 quintals of cloves, and a quantity of sandalwood, nutmegs, cassia, &c. A few of the Tidoreans also survived, and were presented to the king. One of these showed himself to be a sharp trader, and went from shop to shop, in Seville, inquiring the prices of products of his native island. For this exhibition of curiosity he paid dearly, for when his companions were sent home, to their native island, it was thought best to require him to remain.

The return of Cano disclosed the truth respecting the conduct of Magellan, and the desertion of the San Antonio. The memory of the navigator was completely vindicated, and a munificent pension bestowed on dona Beatrix Barboso, his widow.

A still harder fate awaited the Trinidad, which we left repairing at Tidore. She set sail for America the 6th of April, and ran to the northward, to avoid the easterly winds. In 20° north latitude, islands were met with, the people of which crowded on board. One of these was detained, and the rest were driven off. Having reached the 42° of north latitude, they encountered severe storms. Short allowances and sickness ensued, and after a long course of sufferings, finding that they were but 300 leagues from the Moluccas, they resolved to return. On this passage, 27 men died, and the weak remainder of the crew, could do no more than drop anchor at four leagues distance from Tidore. Here they learned that a Portuguese fleet, under Antonio de Britto, had visited Tidore, a few days after their departure, and that the four men, whom they had left to form a factory, were in their hands. Their distress compelled them, however, to seek the aid of their enemy. De Britto supplied them with provisions, but took possession of their papers and cargo. After a detention of some months, they were permitted to proceed by the way of Malacca, Ceylon, and Cochin, but whether in their own or in Portuguese vessels does not appear. On the Malabar coast another long detention awaited them, but leaving their ship, if indeed she had not been left before, they at length found a passage to Lisbon, where the survivors arrived, after an absence of five years.

Thus terminated the celebrated voyage of Magellan, the first circumnavigation of the globe. The scheme and its execution alike evince the genius of the man by whom it was planned. The conduct of Magellan, in the completion of his bold design, entitles him to a place by the side of the discoverer of the western world. His energy tended to severity, and his courage to rashness, but for these, we must admit palliations in the lawlessness of his associates, and the martial habits of his time. Unhappily, the story of his voyage is but a fit preface to that 'history of usurpations,' which is 'the history of European intercourse with the east.' There can be no excuse for the cruelty with which he inflicted vengeance on the islanders who had offended him, or for the readiness with which he lent himself to the prosecution of a petty, brutal, and to himself, fatal war. Still more censurable is the conduct of his associates after his death. If we take into account their conduct towards each other and the people of the islands along their route, we shall have great difficulty in placing the Spaniard of that time, much higher in the scale of civilization than the natives of Tidore. Would that this could be said only of the 'Spaniard of that time.' But further observation requires us to generalize this remark, and to apply it, with few exceptions, to the successive expeditions which have visited this archipelago, under Spanish, Portuguese, and Dutch colors, from the days of Magellan, down to the present time. Can nothing be done to cut off this long entail of injuries, and to secure some compensatory reversions, to the people of these eastern isles? The policy of the present rulers will, we trust, show by experiment that much can be done.

Note. The largest of the islands, which their Spanish masters call 'Las islas Filipinas,' is, on our charts, 'Luconia' or 'Luzon.' This word may be Chinese, or it may be derived from 'Losong,' i. e. 'wooden mortar,' this being used by all the natives for pounding their rice, and not a bad emblem. The Chinese call Spain Leusung, and the Philippines, 'Little Leusung.' This name was adopted by the Portuguese, (who visited China in 1517, following the western shore of the China sea,) who wrote it Luzon; Luçonia is the latinized termination of this name. This word, foreign writers have converted into 'Luconia,' by omitting the cedilla, and under this disguise it is no longer intelligible but to themselves. An American captain arriving at Manila in the ship Luconia, found that he had paid a compliment which no one could appreciate or return. These islands were also called by the Portuguese [illegible] from the capital of that name. Magellan called the islands which he first discovered, 'Archipelago de S. Lazaro' [illegible] first gave the Philippine islands [illegible] 1542; and this [illegible] was [illegible] Charles.

TRADE OF SINGAPORE.

We [illegible] the [illegible] Statement of the Trade of [illegible] for the year ending April 1836 and 1837, [illegible] they do, an increase in the trade last year of nearly a million of dollars over that of the preceding one, the total amount of Imports

In 1836-37 being	Drs. 7,528,990
and in 1835-36	Drs. 6,618,671
Difference in favor of 1836-37,	Drs. 910,319

The increase appears to be chiefly in our intercourse with Great Britain, Calcutta, Madras Bombay, China, Cochin China, Sumatra, and the East Side of the Peninsula, and the detailed Statements which we hope to give in our next and following numbers, will shew how this increase arises. From Great Britain the excess, it will be found, is mainly occasioned by an increase in the imports of Cotton Manufactures, Cotton Twist, Woollens, Sail Canvas, and Sheathing Copper—from Calcutta, in Opium, Saltpetre and Cotton Goods, and in Opium from Bombay, and Ebony and Cotton Goods from the Madras Coast. The detailed statement which will follow, will also give particulars of the increase and decrease in the exports, which it will be seen exhibit on the whole an increase of about Drs. 650,000 last year. We shall have occasion to remark further on this subject when we give the statements already alluded to.

The Statements now published do not include the trade with Penang and Malacca, but on reference to documents in the Registrar's Office, we find there has been a proportionate increase in our trade with those places—the Imports from Penang having amounted

In 1835-36 to	Drs. 426,176
In 1836-37 to	Drs. 533,118
Excess last year,	Drs. 106,942

And the Exports to Penang

In 1835-36 amounted to	Drs. 573,940
and In 1836-37	Drs. 650,362
Increase	Drs. 76,422

The Imports from Malacca

In 1835-36 amounted to	Drs. 160,970
and In 1836-37	Drs. 181,521
Excess in favor of 1836-37	Drs. 20,551

The Exports to Malacca

In 1835-36 were	Drs. 168,957
In 1836-37	Drs. 182,985
Excess in last year,	Drs. 13,028

Including the Trade with Malacca and Penang the total Imports of last year amount to... Drs. 8,243,629 and of Exports to... Drs. 7,806,965 —amounts not far short of those of the years 1828 a 1832 when the transhipping business from China formed so large an item in our trade, and which is of course now at an end.

In our last we published the Tonnage Statement for last year compared with the previous one—shewing that the total amount of tonnage of Square-rigged Vessels which visited the port from May 1836 to April 1837 was—Tons 170,635 being 4,582 tons more than in 1835-36. It must not be supposed however that the whole of these vessels actually landed or took on board full cargoes here—as most of the vessels from China, Bombay and Calcutta only touch here in passing, and of the 229 vessels registering 104,368 tons, reported to have arrived from those places we may safely deduct 70,090 tons, which would leave of—

Square-rigged Vessels	100,000 tons
Native Craft	39,432 tons
together	139,432 tons

as the amount of the tonnage which actually discharged and loaded cargo here last year.—Singapore Free Press 17th Aug.

EFFECTS OF CIVIL WAR IN SPAIN.

From Seville to Madrid, a distance of about three hundred and sixty miles, there is not a city, town, or village, which does not wear the aspect of desolation. Many of them, indeed, are complete ruins. Cordova, once illustrated by the names of Seneca and Lucan, and said to posses in the times of the Moors a million of inhabitants, has scarcely one good shop remaining. As for trade, commerce or manufactures, not a trace of them remains, as compared with its former prosperity. The same may be said of the other principal towns met with in this line of road through the country. You enter any one of them—the streets appear as if the wretched pavement had just been dislocated by an earthquake. You inquire for public schools—the phrase is scarcely intelligible to the inhabitants. You ask for an asylum for the poor—the voices of a crowd of paupers, tell you too plainly that no such institution exists. You pass on to one of the churches on Sunday, expecting to find a congregation with books in their hands—the house of worship is not half filled, nor does one out of twenty know how to read. You proceed to the barrack, a corresponding scene presents itself to your view; a set of men as fine as any in the world you will, no doubt, find there, but scarcely two of them are dressed alike; the whole, indeed, presenting a most unsoldierly appearance. You look for a manufactory, where some branch of national industry might be profitably cultivated, and the numbers of children and idlers who perambulate the streets, or sit in the highways, might be employed; but in no instance have I been able to observe any such symptoms of [illegible] Over this [illegible] and misery the clergyman [illegible] by the [illegible] place, [illegible] fifty miles, [illegible] of a cottage. Nowhere, indeed, is to be seen the comfortable house of the peasant, with its small but well cultivated garden and flowers, an unerring emblem of national peace and prosperity. Afraid to dwell alone, the peasantry are collected into crowded villages, far from the fields which they cultivate, and in which they have little or no interest. To so fearful a state has a succession of wars brought the country, that I have not unfrequently seen the ploughman proceed to the field with his musket slung over his shoulder, and the sword suspended from the olive while the labourer was pruning its branches.—Letter in the Morn. Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,

Returning, a few days since, from a [illegible] excursion to the northward, I was grieved to learn that a controversy had arisen between G. T. Lay Esq. and Capt. Fraser of the Brig Himmaleh, which had even found its way into the public papers. This controversy was the more to be regretted, as it had sprung up in the prosecution of an enterprise benevolent in its design and outline, and threatened to mar its best results, as well as to injure the contending parties.

I would gladly have kept [illegible] contest, but it is evident to [illegible] public, that, as one of the ow[illegible] and as the chief director of [illegible] voyage, I cannot, by mere sile[illegible] lity. I must either declare [illegible] of any evidence on the case [illegible] convicts me of a suppression [illegible] with truth make the fo[illegible] course, an unwilling [illegible] condemnation. Besides, as one o[illegible] Capt. Fraser and as one of the perso[illegible] Mr. Lay to put himself on board the [illegible] owe a duty to both parties; and a c[illegible] where one or the other of these parties must be extremely culpable, my suppression of evidence, though prompted by kind feeling towards the [illegible] would be injustice to the aggrieved individual.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Editor, I subjoin extracts from the two communications which have reached me, on the case, and to which I will, with your leave, add hereafter any further testimony which shall be addressed to me. You will yourself bear me witness, that in so doing I am not awakening a controversy which would otherwise have slept, but rather substituting a [illegible] statement for an interested [illegible].

The first evidence is contained in a [illegible] August 7th, from the Rev. J. T. Dickinson, [illegible] and excellent associate of Mr. Lay in the [illegible] mission.

"Such facts have recently come to my knowledge respecting Captain A. V. Fraser [illegible] Himmaleh, as seem to require [illegible] [illegible] representations to you, and, for [illegible] may even say that my testimony, in regard to Mr. Lay, would correspond with his own. What then is my testimony? It is, that the treatment which Mr. Lay received from him was abusive in the extreme, although there was no fault, so far as I know, in the manner in which Mr. Lay treated Capt. F."

• • • • • •

"It is right, also, that you should know that allusions of a disrespectful kind were not unfrequently made respecting yourself, for sending him on such a foolish voyage and giving him such absurd instructions. The terms foolish and absurd are mild compared with those which he sometimes employed."

"Such being the character of Captain Fraser, it may seem strange that I have hitherto maintained silence in regard to him. I now see that I ought to have taken a different course. The following extract from a letter written before I had heard of the slanderous reports which have recently come to my ears, will show both my opinion of his character and my reason for not speaking out against him."

"I have so often found his (Capt. Fraser's) statements either contradictory, or palpably without foundation, and I have so often witnessed in his language and conduct what appeared to me to evince an entire want of principle, that I have lost all confidence in him. I consider him one of the worst men I ever knew. His character ought to be made public, so that he may no longer have it in his power to deceive and injure men as he now does. Mr. Lay will do this, unless Capt. F should manifest a spirit of thorough repentance, and become a new man. It has been my prayer, and is still, that he may repent and receive the forgiveness of his God and of all he has injured. But if he will not repent, then the community will suffer so long as such a man goes at large and in disguise. To those who do not know him well, there is much that is prepossessing in his apparent sincerity and his seeming regrets and grief for the faults of others. There is honey upon his tongue, but "the poison of Asps is under his lips."

"The story in circulation here in respect to Capt. Fraser's benevolent interference in order to prevent the distribution of Bibles at Bruni, is a curious specimen of the mischief which a double tongue may do. I will give a brief statement of the facts. About the time of our arrival at Bruni, Capt. F. expressed to me his serious fears that the distribution of Christian books would excite the prejudices of the people against us. To quiet these fears, I told him I would not distribute any. I thought myself justified in taking this ground, partly because I knew that it was important to avoid offending Capt. F., partly because I did not expect to find much demand for books, partly because I knew we could always send as many books as we pleased to Bruni by the prows which visit Singapore, and partly [illegible] the main object I had in view throughout the voyage was to obtain information, to form acquaintances, and to open the way, if possible, for ulterior operations. My promise to Capt. F. I adhered to throughout, and uniformly told those who applied to me for books, that I had none to give them. Capt. F. was aware of all this at the time, and his benevolent interference, therefore, had no bearing upon me. Mr. Lay knew nothing of my promise until sometime after it was given, and if he had known of it he would not have been bound by it. Long before we left Bruni the people had learned that I was one of the Singapore missionaries, and when we left, the chief Imam, or high priest, sent his particular thanks to Mr. Tracy for distributing books to his people on board the prows at Singapore. All these, and other facts of the same bearing, I took pains to communicate to Capt. Fraser, and we did not suppose that even he would think there was the least danger in giving away books. For myself, I had never had any such fears, and I am not aware that Mr. Lay had. Such being the state of things, Mr. Lay, when applied to for books, promised to send them to the people on his return to the vessel. He would gladly have given them on the spot, but we had left them, and many things which we needed for our comfort, on board the vessel, which was 20 miles distant. Capt. F. at the time did not assign it as a reason for stopping the Bibles, that he feared for the safety of Capt. Macalister's brig, but that he "feared his own throat [illegible] return to the place." [illegible] caring for the interests [illegible] any certain knowledge [illegible] obstacles in the way of [illegible] supposed that our doings [illegible] Capt. Macalister's brig, [illegible] rejoiced at it. The real [illegible] veto upon the Bibles, was [illegible] been in a terrible rage [illegible] him shamefully, and [illegible] to seize upon any [illegible] still farther. As for the [illegible] speaks, I do not believe that he [illegible] ed the whole matter to him fully. [illegible] I then thought, and still think, the [illegible] he entertained before we reached Bruni. [illegible] this explanation was before the pretended [ben]evolent interposition."

As there is an allusion in the above letter to the instructions under which Capt. F. sailed, I will request you, Mr. Editor, to give them a place in your columns, whenever you find a dearth of foreign and domestic intelligence; I believe they simply show the outline of one of those enterprizes, for which and not by which we may all desire to make money. I will only add, on the subject of this letter, that I suggested to Capt. F., that this controversy ought to be ended by a candid acknowledgment on the part of the wrong doer and that this suggestion was [illegible] in the spirit of "thorough repentance," required by its writer.

The second testimony is contained in a letter of the same date from T. Oxley Esq. the well known surgeon on the Singapore establishment.

"Whilst Mr. Lay was here, I heard that the Captain of the vessel, in which he sailed on his late expedition, [illegible] vessel, I believe, was chartered by your firm,) spread a variety of reports here [illegible] the character of Messrs. Lay & Williams, and indeed the general cruise upon which they were employed. I stated some of the reports to Mr. Lay who received them with great complacency, at the same time that he gave them the most unqualified denial. As however, in the world, one man's assertion is as good as another's, I was determined to await further evidence. Since [illegible] have heard, from various quarters, a [illegible] of the calumnious assertions made by [illegible] and considered it my duty to call u[pon] [illegible] who corroborated all Mr. Lay had [illegible] told me he could not sufficiently [illegible] ation of Mr. Lay, in the extreme [illegible] he invariably evinced towards the Captain the whole of the voyage; that he frequently insulted him, in the grossest manner and in terms which he never heard applied to any Gentleman in his life, without his offering the smallest retaliation." "I take it upon myself as a totally disinterested person, being unacquainted with the Captain, to write you this, particularly as he industriously spread reports here which might hereafter tend to crush and paralise missionary operations among the Eastern islands." "The compass of a letter will not allow me to enter upon the particulars which have come to my knowledge in the abominable reports which have been so industriously spread here."

Mr. Editor, before I read this letter, I was disposed to regard the remarks of Mr. Lay, in the Singapore paper, as an attack, deserved perhaps, but certainly uncalled for. But if the amiable and candid writer of the above be not mistaken, it was a poor defence, shielding its author only on the side of his public duty, as an agent of the Bible Society' while it left the whole man exposed to a volley of unanswered calumnies.

This, Mr. Editor, is all the evidence I am at present in possession of, on this unhappy controversy. Even this has reached me under confidential forms, which nothing but the urgency of the case can have authorized me to violate; need I add that I have none to give on the part of Messrs. Olyphant & Co; the Gentlemen involved in this contest are, to us, strangers. The one has come to us under the usual introductions of an employed commander, the other bears the testimonials of a scientific naturalist and holds the place of an Agent to a great public body.

I will only repeat, in conclusion of this painful task, that whatever further evidence shall reach me, I will, with your permission, send to your paper. If it occur to any one, that the return of Capt. Fraser in a few days to the United States, makes this an untimely communication, I reply, that it is the first opportunity I have had, and that I have made Capt F. aware that my views of duty compel me to take this controversy out of the hands of the interested parties, that it may be settled, not on recriminations, but on evidence.

Your's
C. W. KING,
(OLYPHANT & Co.)

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Mr. Editor,—Your Palmerston Correspondent and yous seem to differ as to whether any blame is attributable to the British Government for the present ruinous position of the China trade in tea and silk.

Pray Mr. Editor, have you forgotten the £800,000—forced by the Finance Committee on the market last year? and against which Finance Committee the Chamber of Commerce petitioned three years since?

Have you forgotten that Lord Glenelg, in introducing the bill which finished the Tea-monopoly, took as his principle "no encrease on Hon. Co's Tea duties?—This was 96 p. c.—yet all low black teas now pay 300 p. c. duty—by this means checking increased consumption, the only legitimate safety to the certain encreased importation of a free-trade —and that this breach of faith and bad policy was respectfully in a petition pointed out to the Home Government.—Have you forgotten the application in July 1836 on the subject of the £1,000,000 advance on Bohea duty—when all the first houses in Great Britain showed the Chancellor of the Exchequer the hurtful and [illegible] of withdrawing such a sum from trade—without effect however until the evil was done—then the Exchequer granted to necessity (on worse terms to Government) what was denied to reason and utility?—

Lord Palmerston and his confederates in office may have forgotten these things; but they are deeply engraven on the memories of hundreds of industrious and ruined traders and their families, and they will be visited in due time on an administration who, by their ignorant and obstinate tampering with matters beyond their comprehension have reduced the once flourishing Chinese trade to be an affair of desperate gambling, instead of the healthy and beneficial situation of true commerce.

ANOTHER BRITISH TRADER.

CANTON PRESS,

6th September 1837.

With this number the Canton Press commences the third year of it's existence, and if we have in any way failed, during our short existence of two years, in giving satisfaction to our readers, it has not been for want of the wish, nor of exertions to be useful to the foreign public of Canton, our endeavours having ever been directed towards elucidating our position towards the Chinese, and towards rendering our relations [illegible] deepened. If, at the [illegible] met with at least [illegible] been anticipated, [illegible] ing, and our [illegible] vinced that [illegible] active interference on the part of the British or any other Government would, as long as there is no better cause for them than has hitherto existed, be not only of no avail, but may possibly be injurious. We see no sufficient reason, at the present day, in any way to diverge from our former course of policy, though, as we have on several occasions stated, circumstances may arise which may considerably change the views we now take of our political relations with China. One of the most threatening among our differences with the Chinese is the Opium trade, which lately has, unfortunately for the pecuniary interests of the Canton community, attracted too much of the Peking Government's attention. We do not wish now to discuss a question, which has of late been frequently mooted in Canton, whether this immense trade, yielding millions of revenue to the Indian Government, is immoral or not; we will only look upon it in a political point of view; and there we find that we are continually transgressing the laws of the country in which we live; and that, from the confessions of the Chinese themselves, it appears that they cannot prevent us. This must ultimately cause the aggrieved party, (if it has the power) to resort to violent measures, and from an edict in another part of our paper it will be seen that the clouds are now gathering for a storm. It were much to be wished that the foreign traders had better ground to support them than they have at present.

It is well known that for 15 months past the Peking Government has watched with more than usual care the progress of the Opium trade, and that Edict after Edict has appeared prohibiting the importation of the drug. The shipping outside too has for the first time been effectually annoyed by the measures of the Chinese Government, and has been obliged to shift it's anchorage from one place to another. With all these demonstrations of zeal on the part of the government to prevent this trade, the deliveries have during the time mentioned been as extensive or more so than ever, and it is very plain that if even the first Officers of the Government at Peking are serious in preventing the importation of Opium, they cannot obtain cooperation of the inferior mandarins, particularly of those whose location puts them in the way of temptation, and whose very low lawful emoluments or salaries naturally point out to them the public revenue or their counteracting of the laws, as the best means of mending their fortunes. It seems that parties at Peking are perfectly aware of these circumstances, and we now hear of a rumour that a proposal has been made to the Emperor TO DO AWAY WITH THE WHOLE OF THE FOREIGN TRADE, AS THE ONLY MEANS OF PREVENTING OPIUM FROM BEING BROUGHT INTO THE EMPIRE. We do not know how this precious proposal may have been met by the Government, and though we give the above as merely a rumour, such a mode of proceeding would but too well agree with the vainglorious character of those in office, who affect to despise a trade which officially yields them an annual revenue of no more than about 2 millions of Taels; besides the Chinese have, with very few exceptions, invariably spoken of the foreign trade, as being merely permitted from compassion to foreigners, their nation being totally independent of it. Such a scheme cannot, we suppose, be carried into execution, even if the Peking Government would enforce it. It would throw millions, who now find their subsistence by the foreign trade, out of bread, and spread discontent and misery over some of the most fertile, populous, and industrious provinces of China.

From the following proclamation of Chin, the Admiral, which we recopy as communicated to the Register of the 5th inst., it will be seen that the Chinese naval power is to cooperate in chasing away the Opium-ships as well as all those that do not go to Canton to trade. Whether this threat is meant to be carried into execution, remains to be seen; it may probably be nothing more than just a rifacciamento of similar documents which are forgotten as soon as issued, and are meant only to prove to the Government at Peking how very careful it's officers here are of their trust. We learn that these documents have been handed to some of the Captains of the outside ships.

To the Captain or Captains of Foreign ships.
A proclamation.

Chin, by imperial appointment, admiral of the squadron of Fokien province, Formosa &c. &c., and Tow, by imperial appointment, commander of the garrison of Amoy, and various other places in the province of Fokien, issue this intelligible proclamation.

Whereas a Kingdom is held together by it's laws —if these laws are not put in force, then no commands can be carried into effect—and, if commands cannot be carried into effect, the whole social fabric is loosened, and it is very nearly the same thing as if there were no laws at all. How can words express the excesses that would then ensue?

Your Foreign ships are only permitted to remain at Canton and trade; they are not allowed to go to other provinces; this fixed law has already been reduced to certain specific regulations—but ye foreigners, giving no heed to the laws of Heaven's Dynasty, are every day furtively rambling about; you never let us rest a moment from your visits. Although it may be said that the intercourse of foreign with Chinese ships is a common occurrence, still ye are engaged in the sale of Opium; a thing which our prohibitive laws do not allow: we would like to ask you if our Chinese ships were to take a commodity prohibited in your country and go on forcing it into consumption, if you would bear it patiently or no?

Our Emperor's benevolence and compassion are [illegible] the same; he has no liking to one class [illegible] of men to the prejudice of the others. Besides his ideas of cherishing the men from afar are liberal, and he was no wish to take up and examine into what is already past.

His excellency the Viceroy has issued commands, and what he commands must be put in force. [illegible] the matter to the great emperor, and at the same time to communicate with the Viceroy of the two Kwang provinces to command your Taepan afterwards not to try any [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], he (the Viceroy of Che-keang and Fokien) has commanded us to drive you out, and [illegible] a family (or nation) of savage barbarians, [illegible] wickedness and follow after virtue.

If ye can look up at the majesty of the laws of our empire, keep quiet and give no trouble, if you will immediately spread your sails and go back, we will treat you with politeness; but if ye believe you hold by your foolish obstinacy and do not comply, along the boundaries of our country we shall place a thousand ships of war, numerous as the stars, and disposed in array like a chess board; at the first call they will immediately respond—one cannot resist a host, and it is to be feared that when the admiral of the station and commander of the garrison take their troops, thick as the congregated clouds, that you will not be able to sustain their attack.

But we military and naval commanders do not wish to kill you in cold blood, without warning you of the consequences of your present line of conduct; therefore we specially proclaim to you before hand, and if ye have any wisdom you will immediately return: a circumstance at which we shall truly rejoice. But if you again dare to oppose us, ye will bring upon yourselves cause for the most bitter anguish. Do not then affect surprise, and say that you were not warned before hand! Tremble hereat! a special edict.

Taou-kwang, 17th year, 7th moon, and 22nd day.

23rd August, 1837.

In another column will be found an answer from Mr. King to a letter from Capt. Fraser of the Himmaleh, relating to disputes which have arisen between the latter & Mr. Lay, a passenger lately in that vessel. We naturally refrain from entering on the merits of the case ourselves, contenting ourselves with merely publishing such evidence as has hitherto been collected by, and as may hereafter come to the knowledge of Mr. King, which this Gentleman promises to send to us for publication. We may only be allowed to observe that the mode chosen by Mr. King to lay the circumstances before the public appears to us preferable and more likely to elicit the facts of the case, than by carrying on a paper-war between the interested parties themselves. We shall be thankful to Mr. King for enabling us to publish the instructions under which the Himmaleh sailed on her expedition, as it cannot but be interesting to our readers to be informed of what efforts are making to carry civilization among nations of which we have hitherto known little but their name.

From the Anjer shipping report we perceive that the Span. Ship San Fernando had passed Anjer bound for Manila, having on board the new Governor General of the Philippine islands. There have been within the last four years frequent changes in the Governor Generalship, and we believe we are not mistaken in stating this to be the fifth Governor who has presided over these possessions within that period. The present Governor Sor de Salazar, has, by this time, been just two years in office, and such frequent changes cannot but be prejudicial to the interests of these islands. We hope that for the present Governor a longer time may be received to enable him to carry into execution any plans he may have conceived for the better government of these beautiful countries, whose resources are capable of immense development, which has hitherto been but weakly attempted. Under the Governor now about to be superseded something has been done to promote agriculture, and a premium of $ 5000 has been offered by Government, and gained by the owner of an estate, a french gentleman, for being able to show 150,000 Coffee-trees in fruit, and the growth of [illegible] also has much encreased: but as yet the produce of the island is as nothing to what it is capable of.

We have been obligingly favored with the following short account of the Amer. Ship Morrison's trip to Japan, which, it is much to be regretted, met not with the success the enterprise deserved.

"The ship Morrison, whose return from a trip to the northward was noticed in our last [illegible] was absent 56 days, 48 of which were passed at sea, 3 days in the harbour of [illegible] in the harbour of Yeddo, and 2 days in the harbour of Kagoshima, on the south of Kiusiu, the southernmost of the three great Japanese islands.

At Loo-choo she met with the usual mild reception. In the two Japanese harbours she was fired on, under circumstances which amounted to show cowardice and treachery.

The shipwrecked Japanese, which it was the chief object of the voyage to convey to their native land, were brought back to Macao at their own urgent entreaty. The few nautical observations it was in the power of Capt. Ingersoll to make, will be published here shortly, and some extracts from the journals of the voyage also; Mr. King's account of the trip will be forwarded to the United States for publication there by an early opportunity."

Thus the Japanese continue strictly to guard themselves against visits from strangers, and their non-intercourse system appears to be much more severely enforced than has been generally thought. The Morrison was altogether unarmed, we believe with a view to show the Japanese the confidence their visitors were willing to repose in them.

We received the Communication of our correspondent "Another British trader" at so late an hour that we had only time to give a place to it in our columns, without being [illegible] on it. The [illegible] Mess[rs] [illegible] to [illegible] of our columns our time was too short, [illegible] the length of the paper sent us. We shall [illegible] give it in our next.

On French and other Foreign vessels they are slightly varied. Riceladen ships are charged only about $ 1300 in lieu of measurement &c.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—A sale of from 2 a 3000 pieces of Grey Longcloths of good quality has been reported to us at $ 6, being the only lot we believe, received, and both grey and white are much wanted, but with the first heavy importations prices will give away. COTTON YARN does not move off with any spirit at the late advance, which will not be supported with the large supplies daily expected.

WOOLLENS.—The slight demand experienced a short time since for Spanish Stripes has ceased, the accounts from the northern markets continuing unfavorable. LONGELLS, from the short stock, have again improved, and our quotations could at present be readily obtained. Camblets, both English and Dutch, from the late large importations have receded $ 1 a 2 per Piece.

LEAD.—The stock is becoming much reduced, and the principal holder is selling in small parcels at 7 a 7½ $.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—A late arrival of about 3000 Picul of Pepper was sold at $ 8½, but we do not think more than $ 8 could now be obtained for any quantity. BETELNUT has been arriving in considerable quantities during the past week, and more being on it's way, the Chinese are only offering $ 3 a 3½.

RICE.—No change in either the price or prospects.

COTTON.—There is less inclination to purchase the fair descriptions since the late arrivals, and the middling and lower qualities have given way a little. About 2700 bales of Bengal were disposed of a few days since averaging from Tl. 9. 3 a 11.

OPIUM.—There is no change whatever in the state of the Opium trade—every broker has fled both from Canton and Macao, and there are reports of the seizure of a junk with a considerable lot of [illegible] and of a passage boat with a few chests—so that, whatever the future plans may be, the local authorities have thought it necessary to exhibit unusual activity, and by [illegible] the East coast the Mandarins at Fokeen are equally vigilant. Under these circumstances the Lintin deliveries for August were larger than might have been expected, but during the past week we have heard of no transaction. For deliveries see above.

EXPORTS.

SILK.—About 1200 bales of the new Nankin Silk are said to have arrived, but no transactions have taken place, the Chinese still holding out for high prices.—The fourth crop of Canton Silk is said to have been nearly a total failure.

TEA.—We hear of nothing doing in this article, except of some more Hung-mueys having been settled for at our quotations.

VOL. 3d No. 2. CANTON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER. 16TH. 1837. No. 106

LATEST NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

MONEY MARKET.

(From the Morning Chronicle, May 12.)

Further accounts from the United States to the 20th ult have been received this morning, but we regret to say they represent things in a still more unfavourable light than those of yesterday. More failures had taken place, and it was expected that some of the leading firms, which had hitherto weathered the storm, would be compelled to fall victims to it. Nothing in fact, could be more deplorable than the existing state of things, and every one despondedof improvement. They were still without advices from England later than the 16th of March, as the vessel which was off New York, and supposed to be the Gladiator, with letters of the 21st, did not prove to be so. The greatest anxiety, therefore, prevailed to know how matters were going on here, and no bonds have, consequently, been received by this arrival. It is stated however, that some sovereigns have come to hand, being put on board clandestinely, but we believe the amount is very small. The rate of exchange had risen to 11¼ a 12¾, but the quotations of the different stocks were almost the same, as business was wholly suspended in them.

In justice to Messrs. Thomas Wilson & Co., whose name has been mentioned, it is necessary to state that when reference was made in yesterday's article to the circumstance of two houses in the American trade having received assistance in carry them through the month, Messrs. George Wild & Co. were left out of the question, as, long previous to the last application of the others, that firm had been compelled to receive clerks from the Bank of England to wind up its affairs, and might therefore be considered as out of business. The firms alluded to were Messrs. Thomas Wilson & Co., and Messrs. Timothy Wiggin & Co., but we did not state, nor can we do so now, that the succour they received was on the same terms as that given to Messrs. Wilde, for the greatest secrecy has been observed on this head, and the amount has not even transpired. Not to mention both names, would of course, give persons room to believe that Messrs. Thomas Wilson was the only firm, besides Messrs. Wilde, which had received extensive loans from the Bank.

(From the Spectator, May 13.)

The recent assistance afforded by the Bank of England to several houses in the American trade, has, by increasing the amount of the circulation of bank notes, rendered money very plentiful; and this circumstance, in conjunction with the low state of commercial credit, which renders capitalists adverse to the employment of money in the discount of bills, has forced capital into the Funds. An improvement has consequently occured in the price both of Stock and Exchequer Bills. The circulation of the Bank on Wednesday last had reached 19 000,000£, with is upwards of half a million higher than the average circulation of the last quarter, as published in the Gazette on Saturday. It is believed that the Bank will soon be compelled to adopt some measure for reducing this large amount of circulation; as from the present state of the foreign exchange any increase of premium upon gold in France would render the exportation of gold a more profitable remittance than the usual one by bills of exchange. Advices have been received from New York to the 10th ult.; and we regret to say that they are not of a more cheering tone than those recently received from the United States. It does not appear that any abatement of the commercial difficulties had taken place, or that any change for the better could be speedily anticipated. No extensive exportation of the precious metlas from America to England can be reasonably expected, for some time. The American Debentures still continue in favour, and are generally sought at prices nearly the same as those of last week. It was expected that the packet recently arrived would have brought a further supply of these securities; but none have been sent.

SINGAPORE.

RUNNING AMUCK.

Yesterday a Coroner's Inquest was held on the body of a Bugis man, named Berawah, who was shot yesterday morning by the police constables and peons under circumstances which rendered that unnecessary alternative unavoidable. The deceased, under the influence, it is supposed, of jealousy and revenge, had determined to sacrifice the object of his suspicions, and, having met the woman yesterday, he attempted to murder her; but she run into the house of a neighbour adjoining, where the inmates were engaged in preparing a feast introductory to some ceremony which was to take place in the course of the day; he followed, and in this assembly he used his krih indiscriminately, murdering one man and wounding severely three other individuals. Those who were able, fled from the infuriated wretch, who, observing he had the house to himself shut the doors, with the view of enabling himself, undisturbed to load some muskets which were in the house and to prepare himself for defence or offence as his madness might dictate. He is stated to have opened the house door three times, and to have as repeatedly and deliberately aimed at and fired amongst the crowd who had collected in the street, wounding three people who have since been conveyed to the hospital. He attempted subsequently to effect his escape from the back part of the house, but observing that he was closely watched and enclosed by the police and the inhabitants of the district, he set fire to his place of refuge with the design, as was believed, of perishing in the flames in preference to dying by the hands of the executioner. His powers of suffering appear to have been unequal to martyrdom by fire, and in anticipation of this, the constable very prudently warned the people in the street to be upon their guard and save themselves from the consequences of any surprise. At length, when the house had been nearly consumed, the wretched man rushed out, cutting promiscuously among the people several sharp pointed wooden spears with which he had armed himself. He was now considered necessary for the preservation of lives and to prevent the escape of the wretch upon him. He was first hit on the left side, but this injury he received must apparently have been of little importance as it had not the effect of arresting his flight; another ball, however, shortly after wards penetrated his left breast and brought him to the ground, when numbers of his countrymen came speedily up and finally despatched him with their spears and krisses.—About thirty native houses have been entirely consumed on this sanguinary occasion. The wounded are two women and one man who are all accommodated in the hospital, where the utmost attention will be paid to their cases. One poor woman had her left hand chopped off, and the other so dreadfully mangled as to leave but small hopes of her being of any future use to her. The man, we regret to say, is not expected to live.

We think the present no inopportune occasion to bring under the attention of the magistrates, the circumstance of numbers of Malays and Bugis people being permitted to walk armed with their krisses through our public streets, a liberty which, taking the sanguinary disposition of these people into consideration, we humbly conceive to be injudicious and wholly unnecessary, and a privilege which, on the slightest provocation, may be abused equally against Europeans as their own countrymen, for the krig being once drawn, it is immaterial whether the innocent or the guilty become victims, so long as the thirst for revenge of the savage be gratified, and that generally is not with the blood of one individual, but of all who may unfortunately be at the time within his reach. None can account himself safe from attacks upon his life when those, who are thus naturally prone to play the assassin upon the most trivial cause of irritation, are allowed to go about armed. In the that all natives arriving here were required to exhit, after settlement of Pinang a regulation used to deposit in the office of the Registrar of Imports and Exports their fire and side arms until the time of their departure, when the arms were again restored; and every native seen in the streets with arms of any description was apprehended and taken to the police and, we believe, fined.—The introduction of some such rule at this settlement, might materially diminish the risk daily incurred by suffering the present unrestrained liberty of Malays wearing their side arms in town, and we think might be brought into operation without infringing either upon the liberty or dignity of native traders visiting this port. We should suppose also, that the general safety of the community was of more public importance than any personal consideration of courtesy towards strangers arriving here.—Singapore Chronicle 26th August.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

A WORD OR TWO ON OUR OWN ACCOUNT.

The end of the year which will complete the first volume of the Sandwich Island Gazette, and Journal of Commerce, is fast approaching; and the question naturally suggests itself, shall the paper be continued?

Now a very few words will decide the point. The Gazette was commenced by us as an experiment; and the experiment has been one of great expense and greater difficulty; our types and apparatus, as well as the editor are most particularly of a second rate order; and what is worse, our subscription list is so deucedly thin that we have been obliged to "work for nothing and find ourselves." Now this is well enough for one year, but next volume we shall a better story or we are no longer at the service of the public.

Here is the case. We have now secured the services of a good printer, and have sent abroad for types, paper, and other materials, at much cost; if Oahu wants a newspaper, Oahu can have one, provided Oahu thinks the present editor will answer Oahu's purpose.

We shall strive hard to give satisfaction, and make our Gazette interesting, provided the public come up to the mark, in patronage; au contraire we shall stop the press at the end of this year. The paper must be supported in Oahu, we cannot put our expectations at the risk of foreign patronage, although we hope to get some encouragement from abroad. To pay the expense of the paper for the 2d volume we want a certain number of subscribers in Honolulu; the subscription book will be issued within a few days, and the required number mentioned therein; should the list be filled up, the necessary arrangements for continuing will be immediately put in progress. It will be well enough to observe that the name of the paper, if it continues in existence, will be changed for another, and the appearance of the paper, after the new types, which have been ordered, are received, will be materially altered and much improved.

Should our paper go on through another volume we hope to have it in our power to furnish a more liberal share of original matter, as we have a prospect of access to sources, which were not open to us in the early stages of our undertaking.—Sandwich Island Gazette, May 27.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS

Sir.—The following are the instructions given to Capt Fraser on his departure, to guide him in his cruise among the islands to the southward in the Brig Himmaleh—omitting some paragraphs of detail and of a private nature.

Canton, 26th November 1836.

TO CAPTAIN A. W. FRASER.

Dear Sir,—We now instruct you to proceed from your present anchorage, (Lintin) to the roads of Macao, and there to receive Messrs Stevens and Lay on board the Himmaleh. These Gentlemen will accompany you on your cruise southward, and we beg your kindest attentions to them.

Leaving the roads as soon as these Gentlemen join you, we wish you to proceed to sea, and if the weather and winds outside permit, to touch at one of the ports near the south point of Hainan, named as safe anchorages, by Horsburg.

We do not wish any part of the specie on board the Himmaleh to be employed on the coast of China, but the gentlemen on board will use their knowledge of the language to communicate on the subject of trade, &c., if they see fit, with the Chinese officers as we wish you to give them the means of carrying out their views on this point, as well as opposite intercourse with the Chinese people.

Unless your reception should be very inviting, we would not have you delay beyond a week in Hainan. Were there ample time before you, a longer stay would be desirable, and also some investigation of the coasts of Tonquin; as it is, we recommend your proceeding to Singapore, without touching there, or on the coasts of Cochin China. * * *

On arriving at Singapore, you will hand the accompanying letter (of introduction) to Mr. Balestier and endeavor to collect from him all the information you need on your subsequent voyage.

Your passenger, Mr. Lay, having business at Malacca, we wish you, in order to facilitate matters, to take him thither and back to Singapore. * * *

Mr. Balestier will aid you in preparing a small investment for Borneo, of such articles as they like there, Opium and fire-arms excepted, and a few articles, as presents, should be taken with your cargo.

It is our hope that you will be joined at Singapore by one of the Gentlemen of the (American) mission, who has been in Borneo and understands the language; should this not be the case, it may be necessary for you to touch for an interpreter at Siriatta. We hope however that you will have no need to approach any Dutch port, and that the weather, on leaving Singapore (as early as possible), will permit you to steer for the Borneo coast, a little north of the Sambas river. Following up the north west coast of this island, you are at liberty to examine it and its people, so far as can be done without great loss of time and as is permitted by the weather.

We regard the city of Borneo (Banti) however, as your destination, and to it, its access and capabilities, we call your best attention. By maintaining a pure and lofty character, in your intercourse with its native authorities, we hope you will succeed in gaining a footing at this important settlement. We enclose a memorandum of the points to which we wish you to secure a favorable hearing from the Rajah. The Gentlemen on board, will, we think, assist you greatly in producing the desired impression.

A part, say a half, of your cargo may be devoted to purchases here, if you find prices at a proper standard, compared with those Mr. Balestier will give you. * * *

We would not have any attempts made to get produce below a fair price, but have you simply purchase or decline buying, as articles are offered you by natives and as you see that they compare with Singapore prices. * * *

Having accomplished the object of your visit at Borneo, in two weeks if possible, we would have you proceed around the north point of the island and examine as you go along, the coasts of trade and population. * * *

We have a favorable idea of the position of the Sooloo islands, and would have you ascertain if there be a place among them, where a small depot of goods could be ventured.

Your visiting Mindanao, we leave to your own judgment. We do not wish you to bring yourself into collision with Spanish influence.

Should so much of your cruise be accomplished and you have time to spare and get back to Singapore by the last of March, you may proceed to Celebes and examine those parts of it which are not under Dutch influence. We shall be glad if you can extend your investigations as far as Ternate.

As to your return to Singapore, you may be guided by your own discretion; we are inclined to prefer the route south of Celebes and Borneo. * * *

In all your intercourse with native princes, we recommend the gift of some, not any costly, articles. Let the gentlemen wish, you have the earliest opportunity to exhibit their medical skill and benevolent intentions. * * *

While you are proposing the opening of commercial intercourse, see to be sure that you receive in their wish, to gain a footing for medical and Christian residents.

In recommending that Dutch and Spanish settlements be avoided, we do not mean that you should pass them by, when information is to be gained, or when in need of refreshments. When visited for these purposes it will be better to say nothing about commercial purposes.

We are aware that you need no instructions to do all in your power, to make additions to nautical knowledge, by surveys etc; these will be appreciated by ourselves and by our Government.

As to the point of departure,—we believe that, among the Malayan Islands, those who are seen to be prepared for attacks, will not often be molested.

We therefore recommend constant vigilance, and with this always apparent, we trust you will have no occasion to use your armament. If attacked, you will defend yourselves.

In naming the last of March as the date of your return to Singapore, we are governed by a regard to a further voyage northward, which will employ you through the coming summer. * * *

It remains only to commend you to the keeping of Him, whose great and beneficent purposes will be advanced, we trust, by this expedition.—

Sign'd. OLYPHANT & Co.

Memorandum of propositions (enclosed) to be made to the Sultan of Borneo and other native princes.

1. The country from which we come is the United States of America. It is civilized and powerful, able to defend itself from all enemies and punish injustice done to its people, but not addicted to war or conquest, and having no colonies.

2. It's intercourse with other nations is peaceful and commercial—its ships traverse every sea, and its merchants exchange with men of all nations the productions of their several industry.

3. It invites men of all nations to come and visit it, giving them full permission to travel or reside in any part of its territories, and extending to them the same protection as to its own people.

4. It has Dollars, Iron, Cloth, &c., which it can exchange for the pepper, coffee, &c. of your country; we therefore ask permission to come with them, and would have you inform us at what days and in what quantities you can furnish your productions.

5. We will come regularly, at times informed, and take from you these your surplus products, and ask a list of the articles you would have in exchange from us.

6. If it be more agreeable to you that our traffic be continued and not interrupted by such departure, we will bring a commercial Agent to reside with you.

7. Moreover we have men in our country, very skilful in the healing of diseases, shall we bring one of these to dwell with you?

8. We have much wisdom and knowledge in the books of the language of our country, and we can get in them that, it is more knowledge to give them to receive, shall we bring and explain of imparting this knowledge to you?

9. Our Government is accustomed to send abroad Consuls; if it be your desire that one be sent to you, we will carry your letters to that effect to our President, so that he may send one to you.

10. When we are gone, should any vessel of our country visit you or be wrecked on your coasts, we beg you to receive them kindly. Should any of the crews misbehave, we entreat you, in as much as there are bad men in all nations, not to involve the innocent with the guilty.

N. B. These propositions are not formal, but remotely merely, the objects of the visit to the Eastern Archipelago.

These, Mr. Editor, were the substance of the instructions under which Capt. Fraser left us, but there was a still higher authority intended to be with him, as will appear from the following extract from a parting letter to the Rev. E. S-----

"We give you, enclosed, Copy of our letter of instructions to Capt. Fraser. We would very willingly have placed him more distinctly under your control, but the route having already received your approbation, it has appeared to us, that Capt. Fraser's concurrence would be best secured by preserving to him his feelings of independence. Should the case arise, where you see that any of the important objects of your mission, are likely to be lost through Capt. Fraser's impressions of his duty to his employers, we authorize you to assume the responsibility and engage his concurrence on your authority."

This provision for the fulfilment of the higher ends of the expedition, expired with the death of Mr. Stevens in Singapore in January, but unhappily his authority was not made transferrable to his successor, Mr Dickinson, and the voyage was prosecuted under Capt. Fraser's direction.

I shall not make any effort, Mr. Editor, to defend these instructions against the exceptions of those who regard all plans that terminate not on self, as utopian. There are a few points, however, which, for other reasons, merit a moment's attention.

The wish, that no attempt to trade should be made on the coast of Hainan, was founded on a belief, perhaps mistaken, that it was better to forego such an intercourse, than to involve the native merchants in illicit transactions.

Every repetition of the Dutch or Spanish name, in the course of these instructions will, I trust, go to prove, that it was no part of the plan, to disturb their colonial claims, rights—I will not call them. That plan was to ascertain the limits and capabilities of the free trade coast and islands of Southeastern Asia, to bring it out to view, and commend it to the people and Government of our country.

By a misconception of the instructions, a great part of the time passed by the party in harbour, was spent at the Dutch ports of Macassar and Ternate, and the Spanish port of Sambuanga. Should this ever meet the eyes of the Governors of those ports, they will accept the thanks of the owners of the Himmaleh for their kind treatment of all on board, under circumstances, all of which, we feel, were not calculated to create a favorable impression of our national character. I refer particularly to the arrest of a part of the crew of the Himmaleh, which occasioned a long detention at Macassar.

At the last named port, the Rev. Wm. Ware was buried. He had taken the voyage as a likely remedy for the native disease, and long it was to find the number of victims to the climate, that were recruited on board the Himmaleh. Mr. Dickinson was a high estimate by all society.

[illegible] the ship, [illegible] voyage, a small [illegible] of the Malayan Archipelago, [illegible] of many of the [illegible] Dutch, the Governor of one of the Spanish ports, and the Governor of one of the Austrian Italian Museums. This [illegible] specimens, drawings, &c. [illegible] Museum, [illegible] arranging the specimens collected, [illegible] will, we trust the liberality of the United States will experience now no difficulty in applying to Borneo the steamship plan, which was sketched, for its use, in a late number of the Chinese Repository. I will no an retain the forthcoming Journals of Mr. Lay and Mr. Dickinson by a detail of the results of this exhibition. A short extract from a letter of Mr. Dickinson may however have an immediate local interest.

"The number of Chinese in all the Dutch islands east of Borneo and Java, and south of the Phillipines does not exceed 5,000. At Macassar there are 1,000; at Ternate 130; at Manado, the same number; at Amboyna twice as many; at Celebes one or two hundred and a few at the other islands. All intercourse between China and those eastern islands by Junks has ceased.

"At the Moluccas groups there are 20,000 or more Chinese. In Borneo proper there are only 40 and many of these have become Mohammedans."

The nautical observations made on this voyage were not yet prepared for publication when Capt. Fraser left this on his return home, but I have his promise that they shall be forwarded to me from Anger.

I will close this long communication, Mr. Editor, with the hope that every mention of Mr. Lay and of his lamented colleague in the above instructions exculpate Messrs. Olyphant & Co. from any implication in the painful event, on which I was compelled to give notice in your last number. Three or four months before the date of those instructions Capt. Fraser arrived in China, with the following letter of credit. "We have found some difficulty in procuring a suitable master for the Himmaleh," wrote Fraser to the only one, we thought, available here. He has been to China several times and for two or three years past has been first officer of the revenue cutter, and employed a part of the time on our southern coast, in surveying. His former employers and those acquainted with him, unite in giving him a high character." It is not strange that we should have credited these testimonials of a stranger, since there was no opposite evidence, not even an unfavorable report having reached us.

If, after commending Mr. Lay of the "kindest attentions" of Capt. Fraser "he was ever abused" our instructions were trampled on! he was injured. But we were insulted.

In the spirit of that charity which beareth all things, in submission to His command who says "I will repay," I leave, and I hope, Mr. Lay will leave for ever, this painful subject.

Yours,
G. W. KING
(OLYPHANT & Co.)

My dear Sir,—I venture respectfully to make a suggestion or two on the subject of Indian Opium for your guidance. It may perhaps prevent the formation of extravagant hopes by speculators in Bengal and Bombay if you publish no reports on the subject of the possible permission to import Opium that do not come to you from the highest sources and on unquestionable authority. Most China folk were mistaken last year, and this led us you must know to great losses and a repetition of this may as well be avoided if it can. The rumours which are now abroad on this subject, and the hopes formed on them, may again cause injury, and I hope that they will not be backed by a public print, as such would then have more authority. As far as I may presume to judge, the admission of Opium is farther off than ever and there is much more chance that the trade will be put an end to than legalized. I remain,—My dear Sir,

Your obedient servant,
A CONSTANT READER.

Canton, September 18th, 1837.

Dear Editor,—Hope I don't intrude—just drop pen in to make a small enquiry as to the quantity of the drug at Linton. Venture to remark in the most delicate manner in the, whole world, as my friend, Mr. Cracks says, that two and two make four. Think that if somewhere about 6 or 9,000 chests have come from Calcutta, and 19 a 20 ditto from Bombay and Damaun, if there are no more than 8833 and a half on September 1st. as you say there ought to be more than 14,180 delivered, particulars as there was an item of 5000 left of last year's. Hope you won't object to my dropping in occasionally. Yours

PAUL PRY.

Abbotsford Hall, 9th September, 1837.

Mr. Editor,—During a few days residence lately at Macao a circumstance occurred with which it is proper that you should be acquainted; and by publishing it, you may save new comers and others from embarrassment.

On the arrival of a ship in the roads, the passengers, consisting of a lady and her small, and four gentlemen, left in one of the ship's boats, taking with them their wearing apparel and other articles for personal use; and landed, in open day, without attempt at concealment, opposite the residences of nearly all of the party, on the great beach (Praya Grande). There were no dutyable articles in the boat so no smuggling can be imagined; and the error of landing where convenient, instead of at the custom house, at the other end of the city, in the inner harbour, arose in ignorance of the regulations. There was, it is true, then a saving of the hire of the custom-house coolies, but this I am certain, was not thought of.

While publicly landing the trunks and clothes baskets, a number of soldiers rushed down, like a hurricane, from the main guard house, about 150 yards further up the beach, absolutely uncurtaining cops, hats, and bonnets and all other nunneries of the nameless articles in these days requisite for a lady's or gentleman's attire, and after some debate and private explanation, the spoils and the were marched off for the profit, if not glory, of the vigour, the chief of whom is, I am told, a full commissioned corporal in the Macao army.

One would have thought that, on a mere representation of the facts, the goods would, at once, have been given up; but this proved not to be the case, and the settlement of the affair is put off till the middle of October, when the affair is finally disposed will be duly tried, till that time remaining in custody. One of the party, it is true, after a week's delay, has been allowed to take away part of his property, on giving security to account of assessed value, to abide the consequences of this extraordinary case.

What I say this for, the cross of these (this virginal) [illegible] not [illegible] to prevent desertion from the service of his sheriff-ship Chinese, only have passed a [illegible] injury to many affected Chinese, I think you will allow that, in this case at least, the rules of law have been without danger, a little relaxed.

The the bankers remains and I think it should be made generally known.—I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
A LOOKER ON

Dear Sir,—I saw your advertisement in your last paper but one for a public meeting of British merchants in London, for the purpose of returning thanks to Lord Palmerston for his great care of the Commercial. The object of this I confess I could in more ways than I could discover the wit of a three-year-old for a meeting at an extraordinary date but this of course rests with him who paid his bills for his "whistle," and if he is content, I am bound to be so.

In your note of the 21. I notice a letter, from "A British merchant" and whatever accession you may take to his communications. I beg to observe are infinitely overbearing by those at one or any from a perusal of your comments on his letter. Part of your remarks, I candidly confess, I do not understand, or see the application of it; but, if you mean to assert that the supine and disgraceful conduct of the British ministry towards this trade, has not suffered us in a commercial equality as in a political light. I am afraid that I shall have to cause your opinion as one of those deduced from any thing but facts and experience.

As to the Spanish debts commission, which you excuse it to after all, but a trumpery affair—he more fees of the minister fellow to the mouth, and their remaining whence what may have been good has evaporated—a trick to persuade the English people that their trade to this country was not without protection—a blind to conceal the follies and ignorance which have characterized the conduct of the British Government, in all that has had relation to this country since the establishment of our "free trade"—a cowardly attempt, followed up from year to year, at the cost of the country generally, the imbecility and unfairness in which all the measures, hitherto adopted, have had their origin.

Is this our only complaint against the British Government (your Correspondent, as I suppose, meaning the Ministry when he names Lord Palmerston)? Sir, it is not!—We may conclude, and that most justly of broken faith—of the grossest inattention, to interests important as palpable—of the meanest truckling to our arch enemies the East India Company: of the sacrifice of the fair trader to their defeated rivals—of the suppression of an Act of the British Parliament by the persevering rapidity of this same company in their interference with exchanges, supplies, and prices, unchecked by any one— of the silent indifference with which the representations from this and from many of our commercial cities, interested in this trade, in opposition to this allowed illegality have been treated— of the dreadful and destructive duties with which our teas have been saddled at home, making, what we would gla ly afford to sell cheap, dear to the consumer; neutralising the object of the opened trade; ti ja ing, if not ruining, the speculator; and unfairly adding to the revenues of the country, by the enhancement of duties, amounting, in many instances, to even 500 a 600 per cent.

To this list, you will please to add the pol ical consequences—the national disgrace—the poltroonery with which it has been concealed or glossed over —but whilst I have not to spar even to trust my pen with my opinion of—I think you will make up a list of charges against Lord Palmerston, and his colleagues, which might well weigh down more than "a British Trader's" "has not at. What then is "the real cause of dissatisfaction" which you wish waited for, and which you opine "may very possibly soon happen"? Is it the judicial murder of some British merchant, or other, by the Chinese? for I know of nothing, short of this that we have not already experienced; even this there are many who think we have had to endure in the treatment and consequent death of Lord Napier. Bona fide trade there is now none security, there is none—hope of redress, by application to the Superintendents," there is none—chance of interference by our government, there is none;—and the recent conduct of the Chinese in the affair of the Hing-tae hong (and this probably established as a precedent) and that of the Linda fleet, may go far to prove the miserable state in which the merchants of Britain now are in this country, despite all our boasted power, and notwithstanding the residence in China of people distinguished by the bold wounding title of H. B. M. Superintendents of British trade in China."

To whom do we owe this fall? That a fall it is from the position held by the E. I. Company's servants in the memory of time some of your more bold old hearers would say. Is it not to Lord Palmerston and his fellows I ignorance and audacity now, for the cause of more interests than those involved here, permitted to mind rest the energies of our country, and turn into a mere political or party battle-field what should be an assembly deliberating on measures for the amelioration of the real strength of the country—her manufactures and commerce?

Had we, Sir, but a powerful and combined party acting for us in "the House," we might possibly look for as much respect as the monstrous claim of the West India proprietors, for "compensation" as they called it, for a totally vile valueless and unavailable property; but, alas! we are but represented in the senate; we have no person to advocate "seizing the ears" of the ministry by often repeated demands; we have but justice to ask for and national dignity and interest to appeal to; while we have to combat the wish of the industry to keep all silent and wrong, and their determination to extort from our trade an enormously increased amount of duty, beyond what the Company's profitable monopoly was called on to yield, and what Lord Grenville (then Mr. Charles Grant) stated it was the limit of the desire of the government to guaranty a continuance of. The amount raised now is 50 per cent more than was paid in the best years of the E. I. Company, and, though this has been steadily progressing for three years of the "free China trade," it would, I suspect, puzzle you to point out any disposition to reduce the duty ad valorem—in fact, the contrary has occurred—the lowest class of teas in the Company's time paying 90 per cent ad valorem on the sale price, and which were shortly raised at 900 per cent on the prices obtained in the first year or two, now being charged with no less than, in many cases 600 PER CENT; compromising its use, ruining the importer, without even advantaging the short-sighted financiers, in whose addled brains the old fable of the goose and golden eggs has found but fit imitators.

And yet you, Mr. Editor, can coolly argue that my lord Palmerston and his colleagues are in no way chargeable with the losses which this trade has undergone and yet has to suffer! Is it not known that a gentleman now in China, a determined and systematic opponent of the monopoly and of its abuses here still haunting us, mooted the question when in England as to the legality of the red tape in China, of Agents of the E. I. Company, whose commercial existence was put an end to by act of parliament and how was he met? Was it not by some miserable legal quibble as to what constituted "trading," and was it not thus given as the opinion of H. M. Attorney General that bill broking, money arrivering, and peremptorying were not "trade," though under each and all the denominations names are weekly to be seen in the London Gazette? And is not this foul hypocrisy still existing and flourishing—doomed again, this year, to defeat reasonable hopes, and I dare the British merchant for the advantage of the E. I. Company in remittances from their Indian territories to England, and the enrichment of the Chinese by the higher prices which it enables them to demand and insist on?

Yet in the face of all these facts and arguments you assert your opinion that Lord Palmerston is not answerable in any but a political view for what has occurred and yet may occur! I appeal to your fairness to publish this, and if you still think as in your last I shall be glad to see your arguments, reserving to myself the right to combat them in your next.

I am, Sir,
Your humble servant,
ONE OF MANY.

CANTON PRESS,

16th September 1837.

Among the arrivals during the week are the Ann, from Singapore, bringing us English accounts (per express), from Liverpool to the 13th May.—We give some extracts on commercial affairs, in another column; political news of importance we have not heard any. The Prince George in 17 days from Batavia adds nothing to our stock of news, nor does the arrival of the Princess Ann, from Liverpool, 1st May, having been forestalled by others.

We have to thank our Correspondents for the numerous communications with which they have favored us. "Paul Pry's" question as to the apparent incorrectness of the stock of Opium at Lintin, as compared with imports and deliveries, we hope to be able to answer with some degree of certainty in our next, not being able to collect the necessary statistical information before that time. "A constant Reader" calls our attention to the Opium trade, and the chances there are of it's being finally legalized. We confess that when, now about 18 months ago, we first saw Heu-nae-ste's memorial to the Emperor, we considered it very probable that the importation of Opium would be permitted, and our opinion gained strength when the local government reported to the Emperor also in favor of the measure. Since then however affairs have taken a very different turn; the memorials of Choo-tsun & his colleague on the other side of the question and the Emperor's assent to their views quite changed the state of the question, and probably all against the legalization became fully as strong as they had before been in it's favor. Then followed Edict after Edict from Peking as well as Canton, against the Opium trade, and the traffic was almost suspended during several months, when the profits derived from it again made the local authorities connive at it. It even found however to be harrassed from time to time and we heard every now and then of seizures having been made, and of smuggling boats having been destroyed. The attention which this subject had awakened at Peking has been kept alive, and the outside stopping, which for many years has been so abused at the Cum-sing mun, and before that during a much longer time at Cum-shaw mun's, has been obliged to remove to Hong kong, a safe anchorage it is true, but one which, from it's distance and it's situation to windward, renders communication with it very tedious. But even in this secluded spot, if we are to believe the Chinese Admiral (see last Canton Press) the ships are not to be allowed to remain, but thousands of Chinese ships of war, "drop not like a chess card" are, if the foreign ships do not go away, to destroy them. These expressions mean, perhaps, little more than the grave & grandiloquent style of similar Chinese documents, but what is of more importance is that action by a good many wai-jins have been collected about Macao and the coast, and affairs have really assumed a threatening appearance. We cannot but regret that what these things are passing, the shipping is altogether unprotected. H. M. S. Ha'rich having finished her cruize in the China Sea and re-ursed to India.

We hear that the several cry of the Chinese government is by some thought to be nothing but a trial whether by such line of conduct the Opium-trade may not be suppressed, and that, if such be not the effect, the trade will be thrown open. We do not believe this to be the case, on the contrary we believe that he Government will continue to harass the trade as much as they can, and that deliveries will continue to be effected by it. The whole of the deliveries in the first week of this month were no more than 27 chests, not a broker is now to be seen, and the trade of course as good as suspended. Whilst we here have to contend with all these difficulties, the production of the drug both in Bengal and Malwa has increased in a prodigious degree, and threatens to be still greater for the next season, whilst stocks here, in Bengal, and Bombay are now heavier than they have been at any previous time. With these prospects, where is the chance of an early improvement, and what advantage will the Bengal Government derive from it's various schemes by which the prices of the Bengal Drug are kept at a high nominal price, when it is evident that by leaving matters to take their natural course, the Calcutta prices must soon assimilate themselves to those of Canton, so as to leave a chance to the speculator of making a fair profit on his adventures, instead of a but too certain loss. We quite agree with "A constant reader" and we believe with some of our subscribers whose experience in China entitles their opinions to carry some weight, that a change of the Chinese Government at present do not encourage a belief that the Opium-trade will be legalized, nor that the vexations under which it now suffers will be removed. Under such circumstances prices in Calcutta must fall considerably, and the sooner all Government interference to keep up prices is withdrawn, the better for the trade. Some fair purchases cannot be made at the present Calcutta prices.

We are much obliged to Mr. King for his communicating to us the instructions under which the Himmaleh was despatched from here to the Eastern Archipelago, and which will no doubt be read with great interest, as giving a proof of what individual exertion can and will attempt for the spreading of commerce and civilization in regions where both have hitherto been little known. We hope that such attempt will be followed up, and it is gratifying to be informed that the commercial part of the voyage has, at least in part, been successful, though we must regret that differences between Capts Fraser and Mr. Lay during the voyage must have impeded the carrying into effect the other objects of the projectors of this voyage. With regard to Capt. Fraser, Mr. King has communicated to us the following extract from a letter by Capt. Macondray of the Lintin, as showing that Messrs. Olyphant & Co. had no means of acquiring an unfavorable opinion of Capt. Fraser from his behaviour in China.—"I beg to assure you, that from my first acquaintance with Captain Fraser to the present moment, I have never known or heard an instance in which his conduct was not strictly correct or honorable, and such as becomes the gentleman and the officer; and I believe, in the estimation of the Chinese fleet, his character is without spot or blemish, and few commanders who have visited us stand higher or more deservingly so.—

Our Correspondent "A looker on" gives us an account of a somewhat curious exploit of the Macao soldiery; if they shoved orders in acting as they did, which seems probable, the onus lays with the authorities, and the subsequent refusal to deliver up the luggage, though proper applications were made for it's restitution, proves this to be the case. What the reason may be why the Macao authorities should persevere in appropriating of this act of aggression we know not; but are convinced that no one except themselves, will consider it but as an act of gross injustice to the sufferers, & of roguery in those who committed it. After we received the communication from "A looker on" we heard that Mr chattels had been given up to one of the party in consequence of the intervension of H. B. M.'s representative; but equal justice has not been extended to the owners of the other luggage.

We must defer until our next our answer to our Correspondent "One of many"; not, because we think several of his arguments may not be answered, but because we have just received the following official correspondence about Hing-tae's affairs which we thought of more importance to our readers than our opinion on the points alluded to by "One of many," whose letter, as we accept in our last, reached us too late for insertion then, and in which we shall recur in our next.

The Vice-roy's answer is an unsatisfactory and evasive as well can be, particularly as the arrears not as agreed on by the committe appointed to inquest them, have been sent to him several days ago.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY,
THE GOVERNOR OF THE TWO KWANG PROVINCES,
&c. &c. &c.

A respectful address.—On the 20th July last we received a communication from your Excellency that you had given orders to the Hoppo to call for the immediate examination and liquidation of the debts due to us by the Hing tae hong.—These gentlemen now give us to understand that they have consulted and examined in accordance with your Excellency's orders—but we can obtain no satisfactory reply from them with respect to the liquidation of the debts.

We are therefore obliged again to address your Excellency earnestly to urge the necessity of an order to the Hong-merchants to pay our claims with all further evasion, that we may not be under the necessity of again troubling your Excellency.

We have the honor to be,—Your Excellency's most obedient servants,
(Signed by the Creditors)

Canton, 6th Sept. 1837

REPLY OF

Tang, President of the board of war and governor of the two kwang provinces who issues this edict for the information of the Hong-merchants (to the petition sent in by Hing-tae's creditors on the 6th inst.)

On the 12th day of this moon (September 12th) a petition was presented by Dent and other foreign traders of various nations to the following import (He e follows the above petition).

This coming before me, the governor, I have enquired in to the matter and find by the records that edicts have before been issued commanding the senior Hong-merchants to settle with the foreigners the true amount of Hing-tae's debts;—and also directing the two Soo officers to deliberate and investigate and make a clear report of the matter to me—

Now this petition prays me to hasten the payment of the debts. For the last time I ask, are all the accounts clearly settled or not, and what is the exact amount of the debts? In the petition there is not a single word respecting this. This is decidedly concealing the true face of things from me.

Besides ordering the two Soo to obey the former edicts and command the Hong-merchants to hasten the settlement of the affairs, I, also considering the circumstances issue this edict.

When it reaches the senior Hong-merchants let them on that very day in conjunction with the H. M. Too ke chung, his brother, and the foreigners occasionally examine and settle the accounts.—When they have agreed upon the exact amount of the debts and after mature deliberation, have come to some conclusive arrangement respecting the payment of them, let them report same to the two Soo—that I may be informed thereof and act accordingly.

Let this edict also be transmitted to the foreigners for their instant obedience.

These must be no procrastinating delay—do not oppose.—A special edict (Sept. 15th).—

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There is less eagerness to purchase Long-cloths, supplies having arrived, and further ones close at hand. Cotton-yarn is for the same reason in less demand.

WOOLLENS.—Without much alteration. SPANISH STRIPES rather more dull and CAMLETS less saleable from the very heavy supplies.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—Two further parcels of PEPPER have been sold during the week consisting of about 1700 Picul a 8.40 a 8.80 for immediate delivery; but for a quantity not yet arrived at Whampoa only 8 a 8½ is offered. One Cargo of BETELNUT, we hear, has been disposed of a 3½, which is higher than to day's quotation. Of TIN there has been no arrival.

RICE.—The weather continues favorable, and prices as low as before.

COTTON.—There have been several sales of the lower descriptions of Bombay Cotton, of which the great bulk of the stock consists, at a further decline in price; in the finer qualities nothing has been done—but in both Bombay and Bengal the market is not so firm for these by 2 a 3 mace in consequence of the late arrivals.

OPIUM.—As the government have not relaxed in their restrictive measures we have no transactions to report. Deliveries however, to some extent are being made, we understand, on the coast, principally of Malwa. Lintin clearances to the 6th inst. were Patna, new 46, Malwa, 61,—Total 107 chests.

EXPORTS.

RAWSILK.—Nothing has yet been done in Nanking Silk which arrives down very slowly.

TEA.—We hear of no transactions in new teas during the past week.

UNITED STATES.

EXTRACT OF THE PRESIDENT GENERAL JACKSON'S MESSAGE ON HIS RETIREMENT FROM OFFICE.

In reviewing the conflicts which have taken place between different interests in the United States, and the policy pursued since the adoption of our present form of government, we find nothing that has produced such deep-seated evil as the course of legislation in relation to the currency. The constitution of the United States unquestionably intended to secure to the people a circulating medium of gold and silver; but the establishment of a national bank by Congress, with the privilege of issuing paper money receivable in the payment of the public dues, and the unfortunate course of legislation in the several states upon the same subject, drove from general circulation the constitutional currency, and substituted one of paper in its place.

It was not easy for men engaged in the ordinary pursuits of business, whose attention had not been particularly drawn to the subject, to foresee all the consequences of a currency exclusively of paper; and we ought not, on that account, to be surprised at the facility with which laws were obtained to carry into effect the paper system. Honest, and even enlightened men, are sometimes misled by the specious and plausible statements of the designing. But experience has now proved the mischiefs and dangers of a paper currency, and it rests with you to determine whether the proper remedy shall be applied.

The paper system being founded on public confidence, and having of itself no intrinsic value, it is liable to great and sudden fluctuations; thereby rendering property insecure, and the wages of labour unsteady and uncertain. The corporations which create the paper money cannot be relied upon to keep the circulating medium uniform in amount. In times of prosperity, when confidence is high, they are tempted by the prospect of gain, or by the influence of those who hope to profit by it, to extend their issues of paper beyond the bounds of discretion and the reasonable demands of business. And when those issues have been pushed on, from day to day, until public confidence is at length shaken, then a reaction takes place, and they immediately withdraw the credits they have given, suddenly curtail their issues, and produce an unexpected and ruinous contraction of the circulating medium, which is felt by the whole community. The banks, by this means, save themselves, and the mischievous consequences of their imprudence or cupidity are visited upon the public. Nor does the evil stop here. These ebbs and flows in the currency, and these indiscreet extensions of credit, naturally engender a spirit of speculation injurious to the habits and character of the people. We have already seen its effects in the wild spirit of speculation in the public lands, and various kinds of stock, which, within the last year or two, seized upon such a multitude of our citizens, and threatened to pervade all classes of society, and to withdraw their attention from the sober pursuits of honest industry. It is not by encouraging this spirit that we shall best preserve public virtue, and promote the true interests of our country. But if your currency continues as exclusively paper as it now is, it will foster this eager desire to amass wealth without labour; it will multiply the number of dependents on bank accommodations and bank favours; the temptation to obtain money at any sacrifice will become stronger and stronger, and inevitably lead to corruption, which will find its way into your public councils, and destroy, at no distant day, the purity of your Government. Some of the evils which arise from this system of paper press with peculiar hardship upon the class of society least able to bear it. A portion of this currency frequently becomes depreciated or worthless, and all of it is easily counterfeited in such a manner as to require peculiar skill and much experience to distinguish the counterfeit from the genuine note. These frauds are most generally perpetrated in the smaller notes, which are used in the daily transactions of ordinary business; and the losses occasioned by them are commonly thrown upon the labouring classes of society, whose situation and pursuits put it out of their power to guard themselves from these impositions, and whose daily wages are necessary for their subsistence. It is the duty of every Government so to regulate its currency as to protect this numerous class, as far as practicable, from the impositions of avarice and fraud; it is more especially the duty of the United States, where the Government is emphatically the government of the people, and where this respectable portion of our citizens are so proudly distinguished from the labouring classes of all other nations, by their independent spirit, their love of liberty, their intelligence, and their high tone of moral character. Their industry in peace is the source of our wealth, and their bravery in war has covered us with glory, and the Government of the United States will but ill discharge its duties if it leaves them a prey to such dishonest impositions. Yet it is evident that their interests cannot be effectually protected, unless silver and gold are restored to circulation.

These views alone of the paper currency are sufficient to call for immediate reform; but there is another consideration which should still more strongly press it upon your attention.

Recent events have proved that the paper money system of this country may be used as an engine to undermine your free institution; and that those who desire to engross all power in the hands of the few, and to govern by corruption, or force, are aware of its power, and prepared to employ it. Your banks now furnish your only circulating medium, and money is plenty or scarce, according to the quantity of notes issued by them. While they have capitals not greatly disproportioned to each other they are competitors in business, and no one of them can exercise dominion over the rest; and although, in the present state of the currency, these banks may and do operate injuriously upon the habits of business, the peculiar concerns, and the moral tone of society, yet, from their number and dispersed situation, they cannot combine for the purposes of political influence; and whatever may be the dispositions of some of them, their power of mischief must necessarily be confined to a narrow space, and felt only in their immediate neighbourhoods.

But when the charter of the Bank of the United States was obtained from Congress it perfected the schemes of the paper system, and gave its advocates the position they have struggled to obtain, from the commencement of the federal Government down to the present hour. The immense capital, the peculiar privileges bestowed upon it, enabled it to exercise despotic sway over the other banks in every part of the country. From its superior strength, it could seriously injure, if not destroy, the business of any one of them which might incur its resentment; and it openly claimed for itself the power of regulating the currency throughout the United States. In other words, it asserted (and it undoubtedly possessed) the power to make money plenty or scarce, at its pleasure, at any time, and in any quarter of the Union, by controlling the issues of other banks, and permitting an expansion, or compelling a general contraction, of the circulating medium, according to its own will. The other banking institutions were sensible of its strength, and they soon generally became its obedient instruments, ready at all times to execute its mandates, and with the banks necessarily went also that numerous class of persons in our commercial cities who depend altogether on bank credits for their solvency and means of business, and who are therefore obliged for their own safety to propitiate the favour of the money power by distinguished zeal and devotion in its service. The result of the ill-advised legislation which established this great monopoly was to concentrate the whole moneyed power of the Union, with its boundless means of corruption, and its numerous dependents, under the direction and command of one acknowledged head; thus organising this particular interest as one body, and securing to it unity and concert of action throughout the United States, and enabling it to bring forward upon any occasion its entire and undivided strength to support or defeat any measure of the Government. In the hands of this formidable power, thus perfectly organised, was also placed unlimited dominion over the amount of the circulating medium, giving it the power to regulate the value of property and the fruits of labour in every quarter of the union; and to bestow prosperity, or bring ruin, upon any city or section of the country, as might best comport with its own interest or policy.

We are not left to conjecture how the monied power, thus organised, and with such a weapon in its hands, would be likely to use it. The distress and alarm which pervaded and agitated the whole country, when the Bank of the United States waged war upon the people, in order to compel them to submit to its demands, cannot yet be forgotten. The ruthless and unsparing temper with which whole cities and communities were oppressed, individuals impoverished and ruined, and a scene of cheerful prosperity suddenly changed into one of gloom and despondency, ought to be indelibly impressed on the memory of the people of the United States. If such was its power in a time of peace what would it not have been in a season of war, with an enemy at your doors? No nation but the freemen of the United States could have come out victorious from such a contest; yet, if you had not conquered, the government would have passed from the hands of the many to the hands of the few; and this organised money power, from its secret conclave, would have dictated the choice of your highest officers, and compelled you to make peace or war, as best suited their own wishes. The forms of your government might, for a time, have remained; but its living spirit would have departed from it.

The distress and sufferings inflicted on the people by the bank are some of the fruits of that system of policy which is continually striving to enlarge the authority of the federal Government beyond the limits fixed by the constitution. The powers enumerated in that instrument do not confer on Congress the right to establish such a corporation as the Bank of the United States; and the evil consequences which followed may warn us of the danger of departing from the true rule of construction, and of permitting temporary circumstances, or the hope of better promoting the public welfare, to influence in any degree, our decisions upon the extent of the authority of the general Government. Let us abide by the constitution as it is written, or amend it in the constitutional mode, if it is found to be defective.

The severe lessons of experience will, I doubt not, be sufficient to prevent Congress from again chartering such a monopoly, even if the constitution did not present an insuperable objection to it. But you must remember, my fellow citizens, that eternal vigilance by the people is the price of liberty; and that you must pay the price if you wish to secure the blessing. It behoves you, therefore, to be watchful in your states, as well as in the general Government. The power which the monied interest can exercise, when concentrated under a single head, and with our present system of currency, was sufficiently demonstrated in the struggle made by the United States Bank. Defeated in the general Government, the same class of intriguers and politicians will now resort to the states, and endeavour to obtain there the same organisation which they failed to perpetuate in the union; and with specious and deceitful plans of public advantages, and state interests, and state pride, they will endeavour to establish, in the different states, one monied institution with overgrown capital, and exclusive privileges, sufficient to enable it to control the operations of the other banks. Such an institution will be pregnant with the same evils produced by the Bank of the United States, although its sphere of action is more confined; and in the state in which it is chartered, the monied power will be able to embody its whole strength, and to move together with undivided force, to accomplish any object it may wish to attain. You have already had abundant evidence of its power to inict injury upon the agricultural, mechanical, and labouring classes of society; and over those whose engagements in trade or speculation render them dependent on bank facilities the dominion of the state moneyed power will be absolute, and their obedience unlimited. With such a bank and a paper currency the money power would in a few years govern the state and control its measures; and if a sufficient number of states can be induced to create similar monopolies, the time will soon come when it will again take the field against the United States, and succeed in perfecting and perpetuating its organisation by a charter from Congress.

It is one of the serious evils of our present system of banking, that it enables one class of society—and that by no means a numerous one—by its control over the currency, to act injuriously upon the interests of all the others, and to exercise more than its just proportion of influence in political affairs. The agricultural, the mechanical, and the labouring classes, have little or no share in the direction of the great monied corporations; and from their habits and the nature of their pursuits they are incapable of forming extensive combinations to act together with united force. Such concert of action may sometimes be produced in a single city, or in a small district of country, by means of personal communications with each other; but they have, no regular or active correspondence with those who are engaged in similar pursuits in distant places; they have but little patronage to give to the press, and exercise but a small share of influence over it; they have no crowd of dependents about them, who hope to grow rich without labour, by their countenance and favour, and who are therefore always ready to execute their wishes. The planter, the farmer, the mechanic, and the labourer, all know that their success depends upon their own industry and economy, and that they must not expect to become suddenly rich by the fruits of their toil. Yet these classes of society form the great body of the people of the United States; they are the bone and sinew of the country—men who love liberty, and desire nothing but equal rights and equal laws, and who, moreover, hold the great mass of our national wealth, although it is distributed in moderate amounts among the millions of free men who possess it. But, with overwhelming numbers and wealth on their side, they are in constant danger of losing their fair influence in the government, and with difficulty maintain their just rights against the incessant efforts daily made to encroach upon them.

The mischief springs from the power which the monied interest derives from a paper currency, which they are able to control; from the multitude of corporations, with exclusive privileges, which they have succeeded in obtaining in the different states, and which are employed altogether for their benefit, and, unless you become more watchful in your states, and check the spirit of monopoly and thirst for exclusive privileges, you will, in the end, find that the most important powers of government have been given or bartered away, and the control over your dearest interests has passed into the hands of these corporations.

The paper money system, and its natural associates, monopoly and exclusive privileges, have already struck their roots deep in the soil; and it will require all your efforts to check it further growth, and to eradicate the evil. The men who profit by the abuses, and desire to perpetuate them, will continue to besiege the halls of legislation in the general Government as well as in the states, and will seek, by every artifice, to mislead and deceive the public servants. It is to yourselves that you must look for safety and the means of guarding and perpetuating your free institutions. In your hands is rightfully placed the sovereignty of the country and to you every one placed in authority is ultimately responsible. It is always in your power to see that the wishes of the people are carried into faithful execution, and their will, when once made known, must sooner or later be obeyed. And while the people remain firm, I trust they never will, uncorrupted and incorruptible, and continue watch ful and jealous of their rights, the Government is safe, and the cause of freedom will continue to triumph over all its enemies.

But it will require steady and persevering exertions on your part to rid yourselves of the iniquities and mischiefs of the paper system, and to check the spirit of monopoly and other abuses which have sprung up with it, and of which it is the main support. So many interests are united to resist all reform on this subject, that you must not hope the conflict will be a short one, nor success easy. My humble efforts have not been spared during my administration of the government to restore the constitutional currency of gold and silver; and something, I trust, has been done towards the accomplishment of this most desirable object. But enough yet remains to require all your energy and perseverance. The power, however, is in your hands and the remedy must and will be applied, if you determine upon it.—The Times April 15th 1837.

THE MARTHA.

From the Canton Register 19th September.

Account of the loss of the MARTHA from Liverpool taken from Captain Viner's statement.

30th August.—11 P. M. vessel struck on the Paracels (on the Triton shoal,) dark severe night.

31st. do.—At day light, the water was two (2) feet above the cabin deck. All hands landed on a sandbank nearly covered with water, as much so as to extinguish our fires; remained there eight (8) days.

9th September.—Left the sand-bank at 10 A. M. with the whole crew, excepting one apprentice, William Holden, who was drowned by the upsetting of the boat, when landing provisions &c. Water was procurable from a hole dug in the sand.

Weather fine, winds mostly from the S. by S. & W. Three boats in company three days.

19th. do.—One of the boats parted from the others being a better sailer; Chief Mate and three men (3) in her.

13th. do.—Made St. John, but did not land.

14th. do.—3 P. M. landed at Macao, all well, Capt. Viner, 2nd Mate, and two (10) of the crew; the Chief Mate and his boat not arrived.*

The day before the MARTHA struck a good observation, made us twenty (20) miles to the S. and W. of the parcels by Chronometer. Steering North under easy sail, the weather being threatening, with heavy squalls and rain.

Sounded in 20 fms. steering SW.
Latitude 15°. 17' N.
Longitude 110°. 40'. E. } or thereabouts.

Since the foregoing was printed we have received the following letter from Captain Viner.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON REGISTER.

Dear Sir,—I beg to hand you the following statement relative to the bark MARTHA, on her voyage towards Canton, and her loss on the 30th ultimo at 11. 20. P. M.

The MARTHA was towed out of Liverpool by steam on the 30th April, and touched at Madeira on the 15th of May to get medical advice for myself (having had a serious fall and injury three days previous); and after waiting four hours, proceeded on until within 70 miles of the island of Amsterdam, all well, when she shipped a heavy sea over the larboard quarter, breaking the wheel and glass of the binnacle in pieces, and washing the two men steering nearly overboard; fortunately, every port having been previously secured, the water was prevented from getting below; the ship being under close reefed main-topsail and reefed foresail, scudding with a violent gale at SW. and constant hail. Observed also next morning a part of the storm stove in; the crew shortly put it to order, and she left Anjer on the 17th of Aug. and was wrecked on the aforesaid reef on the 30th ulto. the wind even at noon of that day enabling her to carry studding sails fore and aft on both sides; and the distance at noon from the reef 20 miles, bearing N. E. by N.—At 1. 30 it looked very heavy to the N. W. commenced taking in sail as fast as possible, and reduced the canvas to double reefed topsails and foresail. At 10 minutes past two P. M. the wind came out in a squall from the northward with rain, but light variable breezes succeeded with heavy looking weather. At 3. 30 nearly calm; hauled the foresail up, and had the yards ready for either tack; At 6. P. M. a light air from the S. E., steered N. by W. scarcely steerage way. At 10. a noise was heard, which made us haul up S. W. and make sail; we lost the vessel, and got a cast of the lead in 60 fathoms; shortly after smashed again, and the noise was again heard, and before the boat was hauled in the breakers were seen close to us; tried to tack ship, but she would not come round.

* The boat with the chiefmate and three men has since arrived at Macao, previous to which two gentlemen left Macao in the Coral in search of her. A fastboat has since been despatched after the Coral to apprise them of the arrival of the boat. Ed. C. P.

and immediately struck. The pumps were sounded, and as she made a great deal of water, were kept going the whole night, and at daylight the water was two feet above the cabin deck. Hoisted the boats out, and landed on the sand where we remained eight days, during which time the weather was very severe, two days incessant rain and blowing very heavy;—five days without seeing sun or star, and the water in one instance within six inches of overflowing the bank. We were enabled to get water drinkable at times by digging in the sand, but which made several very ill; and we caught three turtle while there. On the 7th instant the boats again went alongside, and got some provisions; but the gig, in going a second time, was upset, and William Holden, an apprentice, was unfortunately drowned; we picked him up next day, and buried him with the funeral service. On the 9th at 10 A. M. all three boats made sail together for Macao; two boats arrived there on the 14th instant, 5 P. 30m. with myself and eleven of the crew; the chief mate and three men having separated two days before, through superior sailing. I fully expected to see him on my arrival, and he must be near at hand and hourly expected.

I am, Dear Sir, Yours &c
W. VINER.

Canton, 18th September.

P. S. The Triton Bank is said to be from 6 to 20 feet high in Horsburgh's directions, and called an island in the chart. I can only say it is neither, but a mere bank and overflowed at times: and I can only account for the unfortunate loss of this fine vessel through an extraordinary current, which was afterwards felt by the boats the day we left, making a difference of 24 miles N. by E. more than the distance by account, and I had every confidence in the Timepieces, having had several opportunities of trying their correctness by daily observation before seen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Sir,—I rather regretted to see in your last paper, a letter from a Correspondent, on the late seizure of the luggage of a party landing from a ship in the roads, by the Macao military guard. This regret arose from no unwillingness that the case should be made public, but from the simple consideration that the Macao authorities would rather be annoyed by such an appeal to the public,—but it was better to await the decision of the "Court" and then to take measures to recover the property, if confiscated; or if not, to secure ourselves against the recurrence of the like difficulty.

However, the affair having "got wind," and that, in an incorrect form, I take the liberty to place you in possession of the particulars.

The party in question had embarked from the same spot where the seizure was made, two months before, their baggage being sent on board in the manner in which it was landed—i. e. in a Chinese (not in a foreign) boat, as your correspondent has stated.)

On their return to the roads of Macao, in the equally afternoon of the 29th ult., it being too rough for all to land in the ship's boat, three of the passengers, were brought on shore in the pinnace, and the remaining three, in a Chinese fast boat, the baggage of the party being left on board.

The party in the pinnace landed unnoticed by the guard, but the Gentlemen in the fast boat were squeezed, as usual $ 1 each, by the Chinese tide waiter on the praya grande.

The following morning a Chinese boat was chartered by the comprador of one of the Gentlemen, to bring the luggage from the ship. Executing this commission, in less time than was expected, the proprietors of the articles were not aware of the landing of them, until they were already in the possession of the guard,

It was to no purpose to invite an examination, it was a capture—and the whole, consisting of apparel, books, medicine &c., was marched off.

This detail will show not only the circumstances of this case, but the anomalous position in which the British and American residents are placed at Macao, by the conflicting, unsettled claims of the Portuguese and Chinese.

The owner of a considerable portion of this baggage had just paid a tax to the Chinese Mandarin because they had landed in a China boat; their baggage is seized by the Portuguese, to which end it also landed in a Chinese boat. The same luggage had paid a tax to the Chinese Mandarin on its embarkation two months before, from the same spot, and I believe, in the same boat, but on its relanding, it is seized by the Portuguese guard.

What, Mr. Editor, is the explanation of this affair? Can it be any other than this—the Portuguese do not tax heads, or exports, but all is fish to finer meshes of the Chinese net. When the one party alights on the foreigner, the other interferes not—it is the family compact that both shall levy and neither protect.

Unhappily, Mr. Editor, we know the full distinction, in this part of the world, between, law and the execution of law. Ignorant, as most of us are, of Chinese and of Portuguese, we interpret enactment by usage. What then is the bearing of this interpretation on the case in point? The Portuguese regulations are not, I believe, extant in English, nor is it very convenient for a stranger to find them in the archives of the Senate House. He can only conform to usage. And on this point I will aver that, landing a great many times in Chinese boats on the praya with baggage, I never paid or had demanded a tax to the Portuguese guard. Even within the last year, I have debarked from the passage boats, many times, on the same spot, with my luggage, in sight of the guard, without being on mouth as told that there existed any regulation to the contrary. If such regulation exists, the negligence of the guard has misled, I will not say deceived me too.

But there is a higher ground than present usage, there is no doubt a right in this question. And I will merely indicate where it appears to me to lie. We visit Macao, in the summer, place our families there by command of the Chinese, not by permission of the Portuguese. The historian of Macao tells us that their right of occupancy is founded on bribery and usurpation, and now maintained as an unpublished; our right of residence is based on free, express, Imperial sanction. Is it not therefore probable that we might reclaim, and, by claiming, obtain "a quarter" at Macao, where we might enjoy a freedom from confiscations.

At Canton, we are subject to inspection, on arrival or departure, but what we pay, is paid as Canthow and no articles for the use of our Factories, we pay little or no duties.

I am not myself desirous to see the Portuguese power at Macao, extinguished, I only wish to be able to send a pair of shoes, or a box of tea now and then to my family, without troubling my Agents with an entry at the custom house, or obtaining for my petty commissions the honor of serving some Senhora capo ala.

I trust the worthy governor of Macao will do the British and American residents the justice to believe that they aim no blow at his authority when they bring a trunk on shore with them, rather than leave it in uncertain hands, to find its way to the inner harbor, while they wait in dishabille for the opening of the custom house, withal a little doubtful whether their best will ever arrive; and much pleasure would he give them all, if he would establish his right to the Praya grande, kick out the dirty Chinaman who has filched from them so many dollars ever at a baggage room, and convert the guard confiscatory into a guard protective.

But if the stranger must be left to be preyed on by both the pretenders to an unsettled jurisdiction, it can not be regarded as improper from them to appeal to the Chinese, and to their national representatives at Lisbon, if not to protect their single rights, at least to ascertain their double duties. It would be worth their while in such case, to make a strong effort (we know what the sinews of war are) to acquire a right of occupancy to the curve from Kee-ow point to Cumsingmun, where their vessels, arriving without opium, might wait pilots near them, and where, less remote from their countrymen, they might enjoy, in more quiet, more roomy sea side residences, a compensation for the loss of Portuguese society and Portuguese protection.

But I do not write for the purpose of proposing extreme measures, but only to explain a case affecting us all, and to request you Mr. Editor, to close your columns against any communications, calculated to annoy the Macao authorities, or to prejudice them against the proprietors of the detained property,

Your's
C. C. C.

CANTON PRESS,

23rd September 1837.

In another column will be found an account of the loss of the the British Brig Martha on the Paracels. She had a valuable cargo on board, and, the total loss is, we hear, estimated at about £ 25 g 30,000. Ship and cargo are, we hear, insured in England—our Insurance Companies do consequently not suffer. This season has been one of good weather in the China-sea, and but very few casualties have happened—and underwriting in China has been a more profitable business than it was last year, when the loss to the shipping from bad weather and accidents was unprecedentedly great.

In the shipping report of this week we see no arrival but the Abercrombie Robinson from Calcutta 4th August, and Singapore 3d September; she brings us from the latter place the Free Press of 21st August, and the Chronicle of 2d September.

We have made a rather long extract from the message of the late President of the United States on his retirement from office, on account of the sound views he expresses on the currency question, a question which has of late been much agitated and which is but little understood, and on which even the best authorities are at issue. The President deprecates the practice which has hitherto obtained among the different banks to extend or contract their paper issue at will, as enabling them to exercise an undue influence over the interests of the community. The remainder of the President's message is an exhortation to his countrymen to keep the Federal System intact, as the only form of government likely to ensure the lasting welfare of the United States. In the new President's (Mr. van Buren) message on his entering on office we find not much of interest, except that he declares his determination to oppose every attempt at the abolition of slavery in the southern states.

On the night of Wednesday last, the 20th inst., two lascars belonging to the Greyhound, Macao Passage boat, were by the Chinese authorities arrested and confined in the Consoo-house being charged with having stabbed and dangerously wounded a Chinese in a quarrel which commenced while they, with others, were, as the Chinese allege ambling on shore. Other two lascars belonging to other boats were in the same night also arrested by the Chinese near the foreign Factories as having been implicated in this affair. On the Thursday morning the Hong-merchants and other officers assembled at the office of H. M. Superintendents, these lascars being British subjects, and an investigation took place, at which the accusation was, we believe as above stated, and the defence of the lascar who is charged with having used the knife was, that as he and his comrade were going peaceably to buy some fish, a Chinese laid hold of a silver chain he wore round his neck, whilst another gave him a smart blow on the head with a bamboo, when a scuffle ensued, in which according to the lascar's statement he did not draw a knife. The men were then again shut up in the Consoo-house, whilst the nature of the wounds of the Chinese is being ascertained. We hope that they may not be dangerous, for if the man should die, there is very little hope of the life of he lascar being saved, he being now in the power of the Chinese who are not very likely to give him up to the British authorities. This accident is the more to be regretted since it may probably cause greater rigour to be again shown towards the Macao passage boats, which, though lately prevented from anchoring opposite the Factories, have been suffered to lay near the old Dutch fort, though contrary to the edicts issued against them a short while ago.

On the evening of Thursday the four prisoners were again taken before Capt. Elliot, and delivered over to him on an understanding, we believe, of Capt. Elliot's guaranteeing that they shall be forthcoming should the wounded man die of his wounds. The lascars are at present under lock and key in a godown in the British Hong. From the Chinese having delivered over these men to British authority, it would appear that the wounds inflicted upon their countryman cannot have been of a very serious nature, and we almost incline to credit the lascar's statement that no knife was used; the blood shed has been possibly from the nose only.

The Dutch have after many years unsuccessful exertions, at last obtained possession of the Padrie fortress Bovjol near Palang in Sumatra. The Javasche Courant of 26th August does not give particulars, it merely states that the Governor General, at a general audience held on the 24th August, and at which his Royal Highness, the prince Hendrik was present, informed his Company that the fort named had come into their possession through the exertion of the military talents of Major General Cochius. A ball and supper was given on the following evening to celebrate the event.

We mentioned some weeks ago (Canton Press 26th August) that a Lorcha had left Macao with 15 men, of which 4 Europeans, for the Cap-shuy-moon, and that she had been attacked by a lorcha, and several of the people killed. We have now however heard another version of this affair, which we believe to be the true one. The crew and passengers of the Lorcha went on shore on one of the small islands, and finding only some women there, robbed them of vegetables, fowls, and other eatables they found there, and returned with their spoils on board the Lorcha, anchored off the Island. In the evening the husbands of these women returned, and hearing of what had happened, attacked the Lorcha, when during the conflict one man belonging to the Lorcha was killed.

Texas.—We find from the American papers that the independence of Texas has been acknowledged by the U. S. government and that Mr. Alcee Labranche has been appointed, to proceed to the new country as Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States. The Mexican government had concluded a loan with several old Spanish houses for $ 2,000,000, to enable it to carry on the Texian war.

The American papers of which some files have been kindly lent us, contain nothing of political interest, besides the above; they are chiefly filled with complaints on the scarcity of money, and want of confidence. They reach to the middle of April having come via Batavia.

The Vice-roy has lately addressed a report to the Emperor concerning the Hongs. We have not yet seen the document, but hear that the Vice-roy is hostile to the establishment of any new ones, which would, as he fears, only go the way the other new Hongs have done, such as have hitherto applied to be put on the Hoppo's book, having been men of little or no property, who would therefore be likely still more to diminish the credit of the Co-hong instead of raising it. He has lately refused to give his sanction to the establishment of a Hong the intended partners of which had obtained permission from the Hoppo. We hope in our next to be able to lay this document before our readers.

Our Correspondent, One of Many, who in our last paper, attacked some previous remarks of ours, has misunderstood us—we meant to say in answer to "A British trader" that only a portion of the losses and disasters which the China-trade has suffered lately can be laid at the door of the Ministry, whose neglect of this extensive branch of trade, in not giving it proper encouragement, and in overburthening our principal export from here, with duties heavier in the aggregate than paid during the Company's monopoly, must certainly be one of the several causes of the disappointment of speculators. We agree with our Correspondent that the Brito Chinese interests have not in the home legislation found any strenuous advocates; on the contrary, the parliamentary interest has altogether been on the side of the Company, and that, if we had zealous advocates in the house, it is very probable that the at present so very heavy and unequal duties would be reduced and settled on a more equitable footing. It must however be remembered that during the two first years a duty was levied, which appeared to be more just by being less on low teas per pound than on the better descriptions. This plan was found not to work well, and, if we remember right, it was at the instigation of "the Trade" that the uniform duty of 2s 1d per ℔ was adopted. This duty, from increased consumption, has yielded a greater aggregate of duty than was paid during the monopoly, though not exactly as much as 50 per cent more, as our correspondent would have us believe, for it must be recollected that a large quantity of Bohea was cleared for consumption at once at the duty of 1s 6d, and this considerably swelled the receipts much beyond what they would have been otherwise. That the Ministers, in fixing the new duty, treated the Exchequer with more favor than the tea-importers we will not deny, but some allowance must be made for it, since it was at the best but an experiment, and it was not very certain that the consumption of tea would considerably encrease. That having now been the case, it is time the duty should be reduced, but there are many objections to frequent changes of the duties levied on an article, and the government have not only to consult our wishes, but also those of a great many others, who, holding stocks at the old duties might be losers by a reduction. This we believe, would however not prove to be an obstacle of much importance, since most of the teas continue in bond, and the stocks in the hands of the dealers, on which duty has been paid, are represented to be but small. To render the duty equitable and weighing alike heavy on the rich and the poor consumer, a percentage on Invoice ought to be levied, and we cannot see that this plan would be very difficult to execute, seeing that it is followed successfully in the United States of America. It is generally said that few matters of reform or improvement ever emanate spontaneously from a government; they are pressed upon is it by persevering agitation; this we would recommend to be done by the tea importers.

But heavy as these duties press on the trade, the very low prices for our produce are not exclusively originated by them. The chief cause of them, it must be allowed, is the present commercial distress caused no doubt by a too great facility of credit all over Europe and America, and England has not only to bear the losses her merchants have sustained among themselves by the shock that credit has sustained, but part of the American losses will also fall on them, and the great sums drawn to the United States for different speculations, most of which were losing ones, not coming back to England at the time anticipated, the monied distress there naturally becomes greatly encreased. The consequence of this state of things has been the fall in value of all kinds of Produce, tea included, which has, under importations greater than the consumption warranted, not fallen much more in proportion than Raw Silk, Cotton, Indigo, Sugar for exportation, and many other articles on which the duties are next to nothing. We have so many times touched on the company's finance operations here, that we now content ourselves with agreeing with the remarks of our Correspondent, observing only that it is not till very recently that many of the influential houses in London began to share our view on this subject; many have hitherto thought these advances beneficial rather than otherwise; and how, under such conflicting opinions, is a Minister to judge?

Our remarks alluded to by "One of many," were chiefly directed to the British political relations with China, and we do adhere to our former expressed opinion that the less is done officially, under the present circumstances, the better; the circumstances which may arise to justify and to call for such interference, would be acts of aggression by the Chinese upon rights previously conceded, and non payment of debts due to British subjects by any of the Hongs. That such interference may be needed at no very distant period, is probable, seeing with what degree of evasion the claims for payment of Hing tae's creditors are treated.

We hear of nothing further having been done in Hing-tae's affairs, except that the Committee for auditing his accounts were again assembled yesterday; to what purpose we have not heard.

We were in hopes of being able to obtain for this number the translation of the new Edict of the Vice-roy against the outside shipping which was sent through the Hong-merchants to the foreigners two days ago, but have been disappointed. The contents of this document are to order the shipping at Hong kong, particularly the Opium ships, to be off forthwith, and the Vice-roy moreover expresses his surprise at the inactivity of H. M. Superintendent in not compelling these ships to leave forthwith, since he, the Vice-roy, had been informed by the Superintendent that the King of England had sent him for the purpose to controul his countrymen and prevent their acting against the laws of the Celestial Empire. We hope to obtain a translation of this Chop for our next.

We are also informed that a chop has been stuck on the wall of Mung-qua's house, warning outside traders not to enter the factories for the purpose (as the Hoppo expresses himself) of leagueing with the foreigners to smuggle, and forbidding any but Hong merchants to deal with the latter. This chop means probably nothing more than other similar papers published before, namely to prove that the Hoppo is not sleeping on his post, but on the contrary watchful over the interests entrusted to him, but the Vice-roy's edict, from the frequency with which prohibitions against the Opium trade have appeared, and the fact that a more than usual number of warjunks are assembled on the coast and near Macao, shew that the government is more than usually anxious for the suppression of that trade and they certainly have, for the present, succeeded in almost totally paralizing it. The deliveries at Hong-kong up to the 15th have not been equal to what, in the regular course of business, they ought to have been in two or three days, and all the brokers still keep out of the way.

Interesting Fact.—A correspondent of the American furnishes the Editor with the following interesting statistics:

"The cities of New York and Brooklyn, and the villages of Williamsburg and Jersey city, according to the recent census, contain a population of three hundred thousand souls. This number of persons on the foregoing estimates, would daily consume one thousand five hundred and thirty barrels of flour, or seven thousand six hundred and fifty bushels of grain; and in one year, five hundred and fifty eight thousand four hundred and fifty barrels of flour, or in grain two millions seven hundred and ninety two thousand two hundred and fifty bushels. Now it is stated on authority which has never been called in question, that the distilleries in the places above mentioned consume at least ten thousand bushels of corn and rye daily, or three millions of bushels yearly, besides the immense quantities of nutritious grain destroyed by the breweries. Astounding therefore as is the fact, fellow citizens, it is now demonstrated that the distilleries and breweries in this city and vicinity destroy more grain, created for purposes of sustenance, than would suffice for the support of the entire population."

A brother editor who is somewhat celebrated for the magnitude of his nasal organ, in reply to an antagonist who has threatened to pull his nose, says, if he attempts it he will have his hands full.—Boston paper.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

ARRIVED.—British, Abercrombie Robinson, Scott, from Calcutta 4th August, and Singapore 3d September. Saguney, White, from Singapore.

SAILED or DESPATCHED.—Brit. Lord Castlereagh, Tonks, for Singapore and Bombay. Syed Khan, Gallie, for Singapore and Calcutta. Blakely, Snipe, for the Paracels, and Manila. Saguney, White, for Manila.

PASSENGER.—Per Lord Castlereagh, Mr. T. Gemmell.

The Shah Allum for Straits and Bombay will be despatched in a few days.

The Martha, Capt. Viner, from Liverpool 30th April, struck on the 30th August on one of the Paracels, the Trident shoal, and will, we are afraid be a total loss. The crew, with the exception of an apprentice, who was drowned by the upsetting of a boat, reached Macao in safety in their three boats, after having been near the wreck, upon the shoal, eight days. The Blakely, on her way to Manila, will look for the wreck to see whether any thing of the Cargo can be saved. Ship and cargo were, we hear, insured in England.

LATEST DATES, from England 13th May via Singapore. United States, 10th April via England. Calcutta, 3d August per Governor Lord Somerville. September 3d per Abercrombie Robinson. Java, 26th August, per Prince George. Manilla, 31st August per Favorite. Bombay, 20th July per Herbert Compton.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—White and grey LONGCLOTHS continue in much demand whilst no new importations have been received. COTTON YARN not so much in demand.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES and LONGELLS continue nearly the same.

CAMLETS,—are almost unsaleable.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER is saleable at our quotation. The importations of BETELNUT have been heavy, and the dealers are afraid to speculate, anticipating more. The principal holders are still asking 3.25 a 3.30, but no buyers. TIN remains as before.

RICE,—without improvement.

COTTON.—Small lots of Bombay Cotton are being forced on the market, and there has consequently been a further decline—indeed the inferior kinds are at present almost unsaleable, the dealers being supplied and the clearances small. The holders of good Surats are firmer, but they would not command our quotations. The only transaction during the week reported in Bengal Cotton is a sale of about 1,500 bales, upwards of two thirds of which were Banda a 10. 2., which shews a decline also in this quality.

OPIUM.—There is no change in this article. The trade continues completely suspended both here and at Macao, nor do we hear that any arrangement is likely to take place. Several expeditions have gone, and are in progress for the East-coast, where the deliveries of Malwa have been considerable. The deliveries at Lintin to the 15th were; Patna, old ——, new 113; Benares, old ——, new 40; Malwa 103; Total 256 chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Though several parcels have arrived, the prices asked by the holders are still too high for export.

TEA.—We hear of no transactions.

LITERARY EXAMINATIONS IN CHINA.

From the Chinese Repository October 1837.

The highest literary examinations in the empire are triennial, and take place at Peking. Besides these at the capital, there are also other occasional examinations, which are granted by special favor of the emperor. Up to these contests, the most distinguished scholars go from all the provinces. This privilege is not gained without long, patient, and successful endeavor; the examinations, at which it is determined who shall enjoy it, occur also triennially, and are held in the metropolis of each province. These examinations are of inconceivable interest to great multitudes of the people in every department and district of the empire. High honors, rich emoluments, and, in a word, every thing that the young aspirant and his numerous kindred most esteem, are at stake. A long season of preparation has been endured; heavy expenses incurred; and now the decisive hour approaches.

Two examiners are chosen from the distinguished officers at Peking under the immediate superintendence of the emperor. They must leave the capital within five days after they are chosen. They are allowed the use of the post horses belonging to the government. Upon those who attend to starting six hundred taels are conferred to defray their expenses while on the road; two hundred to which are paid when they commence their journey from Peking; and the remainder, by the governor of the province, when they are about to return after the examination is completed. They are escorted by ten other examiners, who are selected from the 1 scholars, over whom the two pass in front. Besides these there are many inferior officers, who are employed as inspectors, guards, &c., All these, together with the candidates, their attendants, &c., amounting to 10,000 and upwards, assemble at the Kung guen, a large and spacious building designed solely for these occasions. It contains numerous apartments, in each of which each candidate may be seated separated from his competitors. All of the walls are numbered. The apartments are low and narrow, and have only a single entrance, and no furniture except a chair and a narrow writing desk.

The number of candidates who assemble in Canton is between seven and eight thousand. They are often attended by their friends, and continue here for several weeks, and sometimes for months; during which time the bustle and hustle of the city is greatly increased, and every kind of mercantile business receives a new impulse. These candidates are always persons of some distinction, which they must have gained, either at previous examinations or by the payment of large sums of money. They are all called sew tsae,—a title not on the that of master of arts; but they are divided into se ei classes, and those who have purchased their degree are often despised by the others, and are generally regarded with less respect than those who have gained it by their own merits. They meet now on equal terms, and their "true nobility" is to be determined by personal efforts, which are to be made during a given period and under given circumstances.

The candidates assemble on the 8th moon; but none are allowed to enter examination except those who have been previously enrolled by the literary chancellor of the province. The age, features, place of residence, and lineage of each candidate must be given in the chancelor's list; and a copy of it lodged in the office of the fooyuen. They must all attend at the examinations in their native province; and those who give in a false account of their family and lineage, or place of nativity, shall be expelled and degraded;—for no candidate can be admitted at any place, without proving that his family has been resident there for three generations.

The examination continues for several days, and each student must undergo a series of trials. The first trial is on the 9th of the moon; the second, on the 12th; and the third, on the 15th. The candidates are required to enter their apartments, on the day preceding the examinations, and are not allowed to leave them until the day after it is closed. Thus they must pass two nights in close and solitary confinement. On the first day of their examination, three themes, which are selected from the 'Four books,' are proposed to them, and they are required to give the meaning and scope of each; and a fourth theme, on which they must compose a short poem in rhyme. On the second day, a theme is given them from each of the Five classics; and on the third day, five questions, which shall refer to the history or political economy of the country, are given them. The themes must be sententious, and have meaning which is refined and profound. They must not be such as have often been discussed. Those which are given out for poetry, must be grave and important. In the themes for essays on political economy, the chief topics must be concerning things of real importance, the principles of which are clear and evidently of a correct nature. "There is no occasion to search and enquire into devious and unimportant subjects." All questions concerning the character and learning of statesmen of the present dynasty, as well as all topics which relate to its policy, must be carefully avoided.

The paper on which the themes and essays are written is prepared with great care; and must be inspected at the office of the pao-ching-sze-di ma-fan, that is paper; and the only kind that may be used. The price of it is fixed by authority. The number of characters, both in the theme and essays, is limited. The lines must be straight; and all the characters tall and fair. At the top of every paper, containing elegant composition, verses or answers to questions, it must be stated by the student how many characters have been blotted out or altered; if the number exceed one hundred, the writer is fee ed, punished out;—which means, that his name is p sted up at the gate of the hall, as having violated the rules of the examination, and he is for that life excluded from that year's examination.—There are usually a hundred or more persons at every examination in Canton subject to this punishment, for breaking this or some other of the regulations.

The candidates are not allowed "to get drunk and behave disorderly" during the examination. All intercourse of civility between the examiners and the friends and relations of the students must be discontinued; and there must be no interchange of letters, food, &c. On entering the outer gate of the keaug-yuen, each candidate must write his name in a register kept for that purpose; and if it is afterwards discovered that the name was erroneously written, then the officer appointended the register shall be immediately arrested and delivered over to a court of inquiry; and if it shall be ascertained that the student has employed any person to compose his essays for him, or if he is found guilty of any other similar illegality, both he and his accomplices shall be tried and punished. Moreover, the student on entering the hall of examination must be searched; and if it be discovered that he has with him any previously composed essay, or manuscript copy of the classics, he shall be punished by wearing the wooden collar, degraded from the rank of sew-tsae, and forever incapacitated to stand as a candidate for literary honors; and the father and tutor of the delinquent shall both be prosecuted and punished.

All the furniture and utensils, such as the writing desks, inkstands, &c., in the apartments where the students write their essays, must be searched; and also each and all of the managers, copyists, attendant officers, servants, porters, &c., &c. If in any manner a learned person, who is to decide on the papers, be admitted to the apartments of the students, dressed as a servant, he shall be punished, and the chief examiner delivered over to a court of inquiry. A watch, composed of military officers and soldiers, is maintained day and night both in the inner and outer courts of the hall; and if any of these men are guilty of conveying papers to the candidates, concealed with their food, or in any other way, they shall be punished. There are many other regulations and precautions, which have been adopted to prevent fraud; but we have given enough to show something both of the interest which gathers around the examinations, and of the schemes which are formed to gain distinction without the toil and fatigue of hard study.

Of the thousands of candidates assembled at these examinations in Canton, only seventy-one can obtain the degree of Kew jin; the names of these are published by a proclamation, which is issued on or before the 10th of the 9th moon, and within twenty-five days after the examination is closed. The time is allowed the examiners to read the essays and prepare their report. The proclamation, which contains the names of the successful candidates, after it has received the appropriate signatures, is posted up on the office of the fooyuen. At a given hour, three guns are fired; and the fooyuen at the same time comes forth from his palace accompanying the official paper; it is forthwith posted up, and again a salute of three guns is fired; his excellency then advances and bows three times towards the names of the 'promoted men' (Kew jin); and finally retires under another salute of three guns.

Ten thousand anxious minds are now relieved from their long suspense. Swift messengers are despatched by those who were won the prize to announce to their friends the happy result of the long trial which they have undergone; and while the many return with disappointment, to their homes, the successful are congratulated with encomiums and congratulations, and their essays sent up to the emperor. To crown the whole, a banquet is prepared for these newly-promoted men; and the examiners, and all the civil officers of rank in the province join in these festivities. Gold and silver cups for the occasion must be provided by the provincial treasurer. The chief examiner from Peking presides; the fooyuen, at whose palace the banquet is given, and who is present as visitor, is seated on the right, and the assistant examiner on his left. The governor of the province is also present in a train of inferior officers wait as servants; and two lads, dressed like sennets, holding in their hands branches of olive, grace the scene with a song from their ancients classics.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Mr, Editor.—The excuse for the interference of the E. I. Company, in the markets and exchanges here has hitherto been the advantage to them, afforded by their Agency in China, of getting home their Rupees from India at a better rate. Although it might and should have been a question with the granters of this permission, whether another body of men should be injured, that proprietors of India stock might gain; and although the E. I. Company, who knew what they were about, have proved too cunning for the free-traders, it may become a new question as to their right, in any case to interfere here, when the state of the exchange, Calcutta on London, offers, as now, an excellent and profitable medium of remittance. If this rate is 2s. 6d. per Company's Rupees, and if Bills on Calcutta can be sold at so "low a rate, Leadenhallstreet, as 2s. 1d., why come here at all? I have not the act at hand to consult—probably you have—and if so it may be as well to publish the part relating to this. My impression is that it was allowed, with a view of preventing loss to the E. I. Company in making their home remittances, and not as a means of profitable speculation—the sole aim, as now proved to be, at the expense of others.

By the way—at what rate per Dollar will the Company's Committee Exchange this year open on England, to make it more advantageous than if the Rupee were remitted direct from India? And will not this, of necessity, raise private Exchange to a worse rate for drawers than the state of the market will probably warrant in addition to the high prices which these advances will alone enable the Chinese to stand out for? And thus, for the sake of a half-penny greater profit on part of their remittances from India, the East India Company is to be allowed the gratification of marring the year's operations as far as their countrymen are concerned, and obliging their friends, the Chinese at the expense of their hated rivals the free-traders.

This subject is, I think, one which you and "the Register," should keep constantly at, till the point is carried.

Your's obediently,

September, 20th, 1837. X.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Editor,—I beg to differ from your Correspondent, "A looker on;" I am glad to find that some of the Macao authorities have at last resolved to take the doings on the Praya grande under their care, as the consequences may probably be a diminution of some of the intolerable nuisances constantly going on, to the annoyance of more senses than one. Perhaps now, that the new lessons are at work, they will sweep off the bathers and others who publicly at all hours, are to be seen enjoying the cool, unencumbered with clothing within a few yards of the windows of the houses many occupied by females. Surely the zeal of the worthy Corporal who so valiantly seized the dirty linen, and who so firmly holds by his rights, will be directed to this point. If he has a penchant for this sort of thing, there is no want of dirty linen, or dirty fellows either, and to his attention I recommend both. Ask your Contemporaries, of the Macaista Imparcial and Chronica de Macao, their opinions as to this.

Your's, Mr. Editor,

NASOPHILOS.

Macao September, 19th 1837.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

THE TEA TRADE.

Dear Sir,—If I misunderstood your former remarks as to the management, by the British Government of the interests involved in the China trade, I cannot say that I am much enlightened by your last, for I am somewhat at a loss to discover what it is that you mean to assert. You appear half disposed to agree with me, yet unwilling wholly to give up your former assertion, in defence of the conduct of the Ministry.

It seems as though you wished so prove that it is from causes purely of a commercial nature, and not from misgovernment and want of due knowledge, or attention of the authority, that the prices of Tea have fallen. This I beg to dispute. The effects of the unfair duties were felt, long before the commencement of the commercial crisis in England; and the prices of tea, you should bear to mind did not fall to an undue height, where nearly all others did so. That this crisis has produced a yet further fall in prices, by circumscribing the amount of capital embarked in all branches of trade, is not to be denied; but that the real cause of the loss, on most of the tea-shipments, is to be looked for in the immense amount taken by the Government as duty, out of that which the wholesale dealer was prepared to pay, is so plain that I need scarcely re-assert it. As to "the experiment" of which you talk, (now of three years duration) it is so "with a vengeance" — an experiment on the pockets and the patience of the tea-importers; and, until we find some one willing to undertake our cause a little more warmly than you do, the experiment may continue. You say, and I deny, that it is "not certain that the consumption of tea would considerably increase. It was quite certain, quite as certain as any thing in this world can be, that, at lowered prices, more tea would be consumed. Do you suppose people would abstain from tea, because cheap? Or, do you suppose that those, little whose reach tea was brought, would not gladly seize the chance; while those who could before buy but half enough, would still expend the same money in procuring as much as possible of such a favorite article. You must have a strange idea of the effect of low and high prices if you do not think this; and as to "the experiment," it has been seen to succeed in all the articles, on which the duties have been lowered; witness Coffee, Cocoa *, &c.

That there was a graduated scale in some sort, I well know;—but what I assert is that, in lieu of 1s. 6d. per pound, Bohea, and such low class Tea, should have paid but 1s. so as to let the owner divide the profit with H. B. M.'s Treasury—that low Congous should not have paid as much as the highest, selling at three times the price; while high green teas paid but four more duty, though producing eight or ten times as much. What I assert is that the whole assessment was a mere jumble; unjust in it's operations, and mainly devised to defeat the advantages, to the merchant, of the opened trade; it is not some time that it prevented that great increase in the consumption, which should have resulted, to our advantage, and the increased comforts of the people of England? as of them tea may be looked on as one of the principal.

Why when, within a few months after the opening of the season, it was seen that common teas were forced down in price, through the scarcity of the day, while high ones were proportionably raised, should not a reduction on the lower classes be, at once, made, to put them on a fair footing? The explanation attempted, I know, was "the introduction of a better article;" as if the consumer wanted government to instruct him as to what he should like and could afford! And why should the clamor of the "London brokers" have been listened to, while the interests of the importer were not consulted? Because the one were united, and knew what they were about; while the others were scattered and new to the trade. I hope the East India and China Association will attend to these affairs, now that it has condescended to interfere with our wisecares of the Government; and thus it will not allow them to proceed on with a graver error, to avoid a present one; and that, instead of raising the duties, as say true, it will compel them to lower them "at all." This is the only way to raise a certain revenue; and that without running the hazard, or having recourse to such poor shifts as that exhibited last year in the forced payment of the duty, on all bohea tea; for which act of foolish Government dear as it has cost many, Mr. T. Spring Rice acknowledged he could not assign a reason.

The payment of an ad valorem duty in the least, the only just one, and in easy enough, were the government sincere in the wish to act fairly by their trade—"but they are shackled at the stamps of not thus squeezing to the last penny out of whom the duties can buy at. Are there not teas, now resting in the warehouses, for which no one will give more than 6s, or more than the duty? If this tea is worth 6s 2d per pound, in the market, (this being the duty) why should the importer get nothing? Is it more for the interest of either government, or importer, that the tea should spoil there than each should get 1s 1d per lb? What I wish to establish is that, with ad valorem duties, as in the E. I. Company's time, the merchant would have got so much duty as now but on 60,000,000 of pounds instead of 40,000,000; while assets would not have accumulated, nor consequently prices have gone down before perhaps the end of a season. And in what would the government then have been the loser? It would have kept faith with the nation, and the importer, who would not have had to pay, as now, out of his capital, the extra duty, would, on the long, while the country generally would materially have benefited; and the increased comforts of thousands of others of us, now starved, as a consequence, been spread abroad to the delight and enjoyment of millions!

These are my points, which you have not as yet overthrown! and which you may try as much as you please. Think well on the points at issue, before you do answer them; for you know, over those unguarded articles in a public press popularly read, we do great harm to the cause which your correspondent here, as well as strict justice, should induce you to forward the interests of, as far as in your power. Throw on one side of "encouragement" and such stuff. The trade that requires such encouragement is or should be on the way to destruction. This ought not to be the case with the tea-trade between China and England. Give us fair play, moderate duties, and we want no "encouragement" from Government, to proceed even further than we have already carried with nation, and which for twenty years we have withheld, however unwisely.

Do not oppose our trade by your blind zeal; nor deny them as great part of our prosperity, embarked in their success, to swell the coffers of the treasurer—to first, our interests, the real ones of the fatherland, and then to the measures as may, require; and we shall be content. Such would be the raise of the China free-traders to their present comment; or, in few words: "be as good as to let us alone that you have done; and to commence a new plan, as much as possible at variance with the old."

Your humble servant,

ONE OF MANY.

P. S. You mistake in your remarks as to the production in the United States. An ad-va-rem duty was formerly raised, but now it is free. Am I not equally wrong in the assertion that Adam Smith's opinion exist here as to the Finance committee's views on the trade? I doubt if there is now one man in China who is not cordially aware of the injury it has done, and yet works.

MORRISONIAN EDUCATION SOCIETY.

The first annual meeting of the Society took place on Wednesday last the 20th inst. Captain Dent Esq., President, in the chair, who addressed the meeting, stating that if it were supposed by the members of the Society one hour of much time had been actually effected by the Committee during the first year of it's labors, they would find themselves mistaken. The objects of the Society were such as could not be accomplished without considerable expenditure of time, nor was it the wish of the Trustees to act merely for the sake of being enabled to publish brilliant statements of what had been effected already, to the disadvantage of beneficial future results of the Society. The object of this Society was to raise the Chinese by education to a level with other civilized nations, and great as this object was, no steps were left unattended to, to enable it to achieve it. The Society would be well disposed, and consistently advanced in future however as had actually been done in education of the Chinese, the Committee, and particularly the corresponding Secretary, the Revd. Mr. Bridgman, had by no means been idle, though the result of their powerful endeavors would only become apparent at a later period. Mr. Dent stated that Mr. Bridgman, though sufficiently occupied by his other numerous avocations, had been very active in forwarding the designs of the Company by obtaining intelligence as to the system of education now pursued in China, and not there alone, but also in Java, the Straits and other places where the Chinese settlers are numerous, and in otherwise preparing the way for the Society's active exertions at a later period, and Mr. Dent concluded by stating that Mr. Bridgman would then proceed to read to the meeting the annual report.

The Revd. Mr. Bridgman then read the report which from it's length and from it's being about to be published in another form, we shall not lay before the public, contenting ourselves with a short outline. Mr. Bridgman's account of the Trustee's labors during the first year, was similar to the observations of the Chairman, namely that they were now chiefly engaged in preparations to render the exertions of the Society more efficient at some future period, but that, notwithstanding this, five boys were now receiving instruction by means of the society, two of these in Canton, and three in

* See Macculloch's Dictionary.

Singapore. One of the boys in Canton was taken from the street in the most destitute condition, sick and nearly starved, with-out parents or friends to look up to for support. This boy had received medical assistance, and was now doing well. Mr. Bridgman here took occasion to observe that it was by no means uncommon to meet in the streets of Canton these unhappy young creatures, who abandoned by their parents, led a most wretched existence of want and destitution, unchecked by the sympathies of their fellow-men, through which they probably pined until they reached man's estate, and then generally died.

The Secretary proceeded to state that letters had been sent by the Trustees to America and England, to obtain from each country a young man of liberal education, conversant with teaching, and that a few passage had been secured to the one expected from America; as to the one to be obtained from England the expense was first to be ascertained before final arraignments were to be made. It was the intention of the Trustees that these young men, before they entered on the duties as teachers of Chinese boys, should devote their time exclusively to the study of the Chinese language as the only means of fitting them for the station which they were intended to fill; it was thought that three years would be enough to give them a sufficient knowledge of the language. The society could not therefore expect that any progress in the education of the Chinese would be made until at the expiration of that time, but it were better to enter on the plan laid down by the committee duly prepared than to hurry things.

Mr. Bridgman then gave some interesting details on the mode of Chinese teaching, as observed in the scools of part of the Province of Kwang-tung, from which it would appear that though the faculties of Chinese children were fully as good as those of Europeans, yet the system of education pursued was far from improving them sufficiently. Children in China are generally sent to school at the age of from 7 to 9 years, where, if they are intended to follow a commercial or mechanical profession, they remain until about their fifteenth year, when they enter into business. During this period the greatest part of their time is taken up by committing to memory a number of Chinese characters, and sentences from the books of their classics, and in learning to write, which is done by tracing upon semi-transparent paper the characters of the writing placed under it, thus accustoming them to write the characters, the meaning of which, when sufficiently expert at writing, is explained to them. Those youths who devote their lives to literary pursuits after the age of fifteen continue the study of the ancient writers.

It does not appear that great literary acquirements are considered as necessary in teachers; these are generally students who have been un-successful in gaining literary honors—the most essential part in a school-master is to know well how to govern his school, and keep the boys in order, over whose good manners a rattan or thin bamboo, ever suspended in a convenient place near the master's seat, and within reach of his magisterial arm, has a most salutary influence. Punishments are sometimes inflicted in the schoolroom, but more frequently in private.

Mr. Bridgman then went on to state the result of his correspondence with Chinese in Batavia, Malacca and Penang. The report from his correspondent in Batavia was to the effect that learning was at a very low ebb among his countrymen there, most of the children growing up without learning to read or write, which was chiefly owing the poverty of the majority of Chinese at Batavia. There were however some schools where the children of the more wealthy were taught. The account given of education in Penang was to the effect that education, or rather the teaching to read and write, was very generally diffused, and that most of the Chinese there could read; that there were several private schools and others supported by the Government. One of the reports sent from Malacca had not come to hand, and the second letter from the Chinese correspondent was merely supplementary, and this seemed to refer chiefly to such schools in Malacca as receive support from the Government and the Mission Societies. From Singapore no account had yet been received.

Female education in China is, from what Mr. Bridgman stated, on a very low scale. Formerly it is said that many females learned to read and write, but at present only few, children of the wealthiest people, receive any education in letters at all. Here and there schools are found for the education of females at the head of which is a schoolmistress. One of the late governors of Canton, after the death of his daughter, published a number of verses composed by her. Instances of literary attainments among women are however very rare, and in general discouraged by the men. We have thus given a short outline of the able and interesting report of Mr. Bridgman, to which we fear we have done but little justice.

After this report had been read, and after a brief discussion of one or two subjects therein alluded to, it was moved by the Revd. Doctor Parker, seconded by Mr. Reeves, and carried unanimously, that the report just read be approved and accepted, and printed for circulation among the members.

Some further discussion having arisen on the subject of schools, and it having been asked whether schools might not be established at Canton and Macao under the care of native tutors, objection was made to such a measure, on the ground of the utter inefficiency of such native tutors as are at present procurable. In enforcing this objection Dr. Parker addressed the meeting in an able speech, in which he alluded to the eminent talents and virtues of Dr. Morrison, the founder of the Society.

The members present then proceeded to elect by ballot the office bearers for the ensuing year. The result of the ballot was.

THE GOVERNOR'S EDICT AGAINST OPIUM SHIPS.

We, Tung, President of the board of war and Governor of the two Kwang provinces and Ke, second ary guardian of the heir apparent, Vice president of the board of war and Lieutenant governor of Canton, proclaim to the Hong-merchants for their full information.

We find by the records that on the 3rd of the 7th moon of the present year we reverently received an Imperial Edict enjoining us urgently to command the Hong-merchants to induce the foreign residents instantly to send away all Opium ships anchored in the waters (of China) and not to allow them on any pretence to loiter about and delay. We also commanded the senior Hong-merchant, to enforce upon the English Ling-sze (Superintendent or director of affairs) Elliot, the necessity of obeying the Imperial mandate to drive away all Opium vessels anchored in the waters (of China) and not to permit them on any pretence to loiter about and delay. Hereafter he was to permit vessels with legal articles only to come, and sternly prohibit those with contraband goods such as Opium &c. Thus the source of the evil would have been blocked up and the beneficial effects of the laws have displayed themselves.

Since then some time has elapsed, but how have the Imperial commands been obeyed, and what steps have been taken in the matter? Up to this time the Hong-merchants have made no report concerning this.

On the 6th 10th 11th 15th and 16th of the 8th moon the Tsam.tsuang of the Taping encampment, the Tsung-che of Macao and the Hoo and Heen of Heang-shang successively reported that twenty five receiving ships were anchored off Motaou, the nine Islands, Macao roads, Cabreta point and the Taipa. On the 29th and 30th of the 7th moon and 3rd and 4th of the 8th moon, 19 vessels left Motaou and anchored at Tseen-shatsuy, as also two from nine Islands and Cabrita point. On the 9th day of the 9th moon two vessels left Tseenshatsuy and anchored in the Taipa and on the 10th one vessel left Tseen shatsuy and anchored off Cabrita point. In the 14th year of Taou-kwang the Dutch ship Leih-teap-ching arrived and anchored in Macao roads off the nine Islands: she afterwards removed to Tseenshatsuy and on the 8th day she weighed anchor and went out to sea by the Great Ladrone passage. These are the reports. We have also received a dispatch from the Admiral which confirms the above and clearly proves that Tseenshatsuy is to the Eastward of Motaou consequently all the foreign vessels anchored there ought to be instantly driven away.

We find by the records that the store ships all came from the Southwest and must therefore necessarily return in the same direction. Why then have they removed to the Eastward; thus wandering about without any fixed anchorage? It is evident that their unrestrained passions and desire of wandering about and spying into every thing cause this unsettled behaviour,

By the most tender and cherishing benevolence of the heavenly dynasty, foreigners of all nations are permitted to come and trade here! Have they once been required to go elsewhere? For two hundred years, day after day has rolled on in the same even manner; verily, such profound benevolence and nourishing goodness ought to sink into their very bones. But not withstanding this, there are designing foreigners who, under pretence of trading, totally disregard the laws and carry on their contraband schemes.

The Imperial edicts are resplendently luminous. Yet, they are so daring in the face of these edicts which have long been perfectly understood, to allow the store ships to loiter about and delay as much as ever. Shall the waters of the central flowery Kingdom be the haunts and lurking places of smugglers? These waters are under our jurisdiction, shall not we, the governor and lieutenant governor, therefore execute the laws on all offenders therein? They should consider that every country has its own laws and boundaries; suppose a ship of another nation, in defiance of the former, force its way beyond the latter, and after however long a stay refuse to depart, would not the King of that country put the laws in force and execute the offender! He will not tamely permit his laws to betrampled on. Shall then the said foreigners be permitted to remain in the waters of the heavenly dynasty contemptuously disregarding our laws? The king of that nation (England) has hitherto been reverently submissive, his laws are extremely strict and clear; fearing that the merchants and sailors who come here might offend against our laws, and thus disgrace their own country, he dispatched the Ling-sze Elliot hither to controul and govern them. It is now a month since he was ordered to send the store ships away, yet they are still here. It is to be feared that he is incapable of performing the duties of Ling-sze. He thus shares the anger with which we regard the Opium ships. How will he answer to his king and to us, the governor and lieutenant governor, for this neglect of duty? Let him think of this in the stillness of the night, and verily he imagine we will not enjoy refreshing sleep.

Considering the circumstances we issue the edict. On receipt of it the senior Hong-merchants are instantly to transmit it to the Ling-sze Elliott for his instant obedience. Let him explain to the owners of the Opium ships the cherishing benevolence and dazzling power of the celestial dynasty. Let them distinguish between the happines (which await their obedience) and the misery (which will surely follow their disobedience). Let urgent orders be given to the vessels to return to their own country; let there be no opposition or delay. Let the said Ling-sze memorialise his king sternly to prohibit all Opium vessels from coming hither, for it is difficult to distinguish them from the honest merchantmen. Thus the benefits arrising from the benevolent favor of the Great Emperor will display themselves, and the paths of commerce be ever open to all good foreigners.

We, the governor, and lieutenant governor possess ample power to uphold the laws; it is easy for us to carry our measures execution. What could present out at at once driving the Opium ship away? We have not been sparing of, but have a second and third time, issued our prohibiting and warning edicts, fearing lest they might fail to fulfil our desires with perfect faithfulness, and so fall short of our wishes to treat all with benevolence. *

If after receipt of this present edict, you persist in refusing to listen to the comarands and loiter about and delay, truly you will be obstinate fools, and all further warning will be superfluous.

Whether or not the said Lengsze disregards these orders and the owners of the Opium ships close their minds against conviction, the senior Hong-merchant must make a clear report to us that we may act accordingly. They must know that it is their duty to enforce the Imperial commands on these men. This is the most weighty & responsible port of their duty. Let them look to their own lives and the safety of their families and property. If they in conjunction with the foreigners any longer delay obedience to this command, they will bring down disgrace on their own head and their punishment will be awful. Think of this and obey. Oppose not —A special Edict.

Translated from the Macaista Imparcial of 20th September

Extract of a Chop of the Cso-tang, respecting Chinese servants in Portuguese families in Macao.

Pang, the Cso-tang, informs the procurator, that it is well known, that the Portuguese, on hiring Chinese servants, do so without requiring security or even without the intervention of responsible compradores; of which practice the consequence is that these servants have no fear nor respect, watching their opportunity when to steal and run away; abusing the confidence reposed in them by the Portuguese in moneymatters or business, committing faults and leaving the house; and when complaints about their conduct are made by the procurator to the Mandarins, only the name, of the individuals are given, and neither their cognomen nor that of their brothers, sons, or parents is known, nor where their abode is, and moreover no one has become surety for them, nor are any compradores responsible for their conduct. These are circumstances which render it difficult to examine, (in case of complaints being made) &c. &c., and the Cso-tang therefore addresses the Procurator, in order that he may communicate it to all the householders in Macao, informing them that henceforward, when hiring Chinese servants, they must comply with the regulation which his Excy., the Governor, proposed, and which had the Imperial sanction, in the 15th year of Taou-kwang; and which provides that, whenever strangers hire Chinese servants, they must be recommended by compradores. And, should there be no compradorers in Macao, the servants must procure good bail, that thereby negligence may be avoided; and that in case any one loses any thing, there may be found those who are answerable; by which means whenever the Procurator addresses complaints to the Mandarins these may know where to find the thief and the stolen property.

The Mandarin's object is to establish quiet between Chinese and strangers, and to prevent thieving. * * *

CANTON PRESS,

30th September 1837.

Edicts against the Opium-trade are the order of the day. We now lay before public the the edict wealluded to last week; another which has subsequently come to hand is nearly to the same effect, containing the Imperial order against smuggling of opium. Besides this we hear of a report of the governor to the Emperor on this subject, in which the blame is chiefly laid on the traitorous natives & the venal mandarins. It proposes, as the only means of effectually preventing the Opium from being brought into the country, that every boat be strictly searched, and that the government servants be ordered to keep a strict look out for the drug. If, the governor says, efficient measures be taken to prevent the Opium from being landed, the foreigners will cease to bring it. In this the governor, we apprehend, is right enough, but has the Chinese government the power of rendering it's servants honest, or even supposing that honest mandarins (beings as rare as the phoenix of old) can be found, will they be able to guard the immense line of coast between Canton and Corea? We believe not.

Besides the above document another proclamation of the Admiral of the Fokeen and Kwang-tung provinces has been handed to the Captains of the ships on the East-coast, in which that officer marvels at the stubbornness of foreigners who have so frequently been ordered away from those waters, but still they not only persevere in coming, but their visits have become more numerous of late. He now threatens, if they do not obey him, and return to their country, forthwith he will destroy them with his warjunks. Many of these are actually on the coast and we have been told that one of the foreign vessels there counted at one time twenty three twarjunks near her.

Things wear a threatening aspect for the Opium trade, which is now nearly suspended in Canton, none of the opiumbrokers having made their appearance, and the deliveries at Hong-kong during the first three weeks of this month have been only 185 chests to the smugglers.†

* According to Canton Register—" apprehending that you know not yet the sincere truth of our hearts which is damage to the truth that we record you in the same hight and treat you with the same benevolence as natives. "

† In our last price current the deliveries up to the 15th are stated to have been 256 chests—this excess over the present returns arose probably from 80 chests sent to Macao having been included in the report of the first week—which ought to have been 27 chests instead of 107—thus giving the delivery of the third week of the month of 9 chests only!—

LOTTERIES. It is now about a year since we adverted to the practice of gambling in lotteries which has spread so widely among the Chinese. The manner in which the prizes are drawn must appear very singular, being connected with the great examinations for literary honors, the greatest of which are triennial, and others annual. We have taken a very interesting account of these from the 2d volume of the Chinese Repository, which will be found in another column. The great triennial examination took place here about a fortnight since, at which between 7 to 8000 students are said to have been present, of whom only 72 can earn literary rank, and only 3, 4 or 5 prizes are distributed. So eager are the Chinese for literary rank that not only the young and strong enter the lists, but even old and infirm men are found among the candidates, whose strength frequently gives way under this severe trial, and they find a grave where they hoped to gain distinction. But, retournons à nos moutons, or let us return to our muttons, as we saw this translated somewhere, the Lotteries. Each of the candidates having a numbered chamber where to compose his exercises, it follows that as many numbers as there are students are in the lottery, and the prizes the scholars can gain being not more than five at the utmost, the prizes drawn in the lotteries are so many, the numbers of the rooms in which the successful candidates composed their tasks being the winning numbers.

To such extent had this sort of gambling grown of late, and so many were the lotteries on the approach of this late examination, that it excited the attention of the local government, and severe edicts were issued against a practice which the magistrates very justly considered as very subversive of honesty, morality and industry.

We mentioned before that the origin of these lotteries is probably to be found in the one annually drawn in Macao, for alleged charitable purposes, and we are sorry that, much as we Europeans pride ourselves on superior ethics, just our bad deeds should find imitators in the Chinese. We had last year to suffer the angry reproaches from our Macao cotemporary for our reprobating the gambling in lotteries, but we are grieved to see that our remarks on the subject have not yet had the desired effect and that the " Loteria da Misericordia " is again advertised, for the corruption of the honest and industrious, and the temptation to the idle and thieving to exert the latter. We regret that the local authorities of Macao do not stop such mischief, whilst it is gratifying at the same time to observe that the Canton magistrates, aware of the fatal influence such practices have upon the morals and indu-stry of the multitude, have interfered to prevent their continuance. If money for charity is wanted in Macao it may surely be raised by some less objectionable means.

We are glad that we partially, in our last, dissented from our Correspondent " One of Many " in the view he takes of the consequences, to the tea-trade, of the conduct of the British Ministry, since it has drawn from him another very able letter, which we are sure will be read with interest, and carry conviction to every one, that it is necessary for the good of the China trade, that the duties of tea, be not only reduced but levied in a more equitable manner. To our correspondent's questions we reply that we did not allude to tea, but to merchandize generally, in stating that the system of levying duties on the amount of the invoice in the United States had been successfully followed. We are perfectly aware that no British merchant here wishes for a continuance of the Finance Committee in Canton; we said that London influential houses had hitherto thought the Finance Committee rather beneficial to the trade than otherwise, but that their opinion on the subject seemed now also to have changed.

On the 25th an English sailor who had been knocking about Macao for some time, quarrelled with a Portuguese or Manila sailor, who stabbed him, once in the lungs, & once in his left side. The wounded man is now in the hospital in a precarious state, and the other is in custody. Could not H. M. Superintendent make some arrangement with the Macao-authorities to prevent sailors from living about in Macao, and getting themselves, and perhaps others, into scrapes?

We have not yet been able to obtain a translation or abstract of the Governor's report to the Emperor, concerning the hongs.

A FRIEND IN NEED. The selfishness of the Chinese is well known; as well as their complete indifference to the sufferings of others, except in as far as they can be turned to profit. We think it is Osbeck we first (now near a century back) remarked the cool way in which the Chinamen, on the river, would drive a bargain, with a drowning fellow creature, before he would stretch forth his hand to help him. The following trait will prove that this selfishness extends in full to their fellow countrymen.

An attempt was made two or three weeks back to boat the large Chinese Junk which was driven on the rocks, under the Francisco fort at Macao, in a gale some time back. She was lightened, her masts taken out, and spars ranged alongside, with woolen water-tanks (as used in the Junks) but the rocks had got through her bottom, and she would not rise. Casks were wanted; and the commander or owner went on board a large Portuguese ship (the " Cassue ") and begged assistance, through the ship's compradore, offering to pay for the hire of the casks whatever might be asked. The Captain answered that, as the man was in misfortune, he would take no hire; but that he might have as many as he wanted on condition of restoring them when done with, or replacing them if lost. On this being interpreted, the Chinaman expressed his thanks and accepted the offer. It since appears that the compredor, thinking, that if his employer was fool enough to refuse a good opportunity, he was not, stipulated, as from the foreigner, that a hire of four dollars per cask should be paid, without which none would be lent him.

We have frequently heard complaints similar to those of our correspondent Nasophilos, as to the want of decency and cleanliness on the Praya grande in Macao, which, being the finest street there, and the one generally chosen by the inhabitants for recreation and exercise, ought to be kept free from the nuisances compained of by our Correspondent. We hope that our cotemporaries of Macao will assist us in writing down this evil.

"X" on the subject of the Company's remittances through China remarks that probably the remittances to be made this year will not be as profitable as those made from Calcutta direct, and that the Finance Committee will again interfere with the free-trader to his disadvantage We heartily wish to see this establishment removed from China, and so does every one connected with this trade; it cramps the exertions of the private merchant as opposing means to his with which he cannot hope to enter into successful competition, on which account he must desist altogether from bill operations, the profits of which are his lawful due; and what is as bad, it raises prices of exports to the advantage of the Chinese and the disadvantage of the exporter, and consumer at home.

As to the profit derived by the Company by sending their remittances by way of China, as compared with the exchange at which they have remitted direct from Calcutta according to our latest advices from there it will be found that Canton will give them no advantage over Calcutta, supposin gthat they will offer to take bills at 4s. 6d., during the next season and, such is the state of the produce market here and at home, that it is not probable they will be able to sell their dollars at a better price. A remittance of 4s. 6d. per dollar is exactly equal to one of 4s 1d. per Company's Rupee from Calcutta, without taking into account the expenses attendent on remittances by way of China, and the time lost in the double operation-though the latter is generally not a great hazard and may even at times be slightly in favor of the Company's transactions here. By our last advices from Calcutta the exchange there granted by the Company was 2s. 1¼d. per Company Rupee, thus shewing a loss even on the transaction by way of China, should the exchange on London not be more favorable this year than 4s. 6d. as before said, and if the Finance committee were to draw at 4s. 7d. as last year, it would just be equal to the remittances now made at 2s. 1½d from Calcutta direct, and the Company would not derive a farthing profit from it's financial operations here. India which has so heavy an annual tribute to pay to England, ought, in preference to other countries to enjoy the advantages that may arise from it's remittance to England, by fomenting it's agrieulture The Chinese are not entitled to the fostering care of the Company, nor have the merchants of Canton deserved to be singled out, by that Government, for commercial competition. The object of the Company in making remittances by way of China is gain—we have shewn that they do not gain now as compared to their operations in Calcutta—their end therefore is not attained—and we hope they will no longer continue to harrass the China trade merely for the sake of proving that the Free-trade can never be so prosperous as was their monopoly.

Boat-racing. A match was run for fifty dollars on Tuesday evening last, between a sixoared gig belonging to one of the Bombay ships and a Singapore Sampan. The former was pulled by Lascars, and, from never having been beaten before, though often tried, was the favorite, so much so that but few bets depended on the event. The Sampan, arranged like a gig, was pulled by five Chinese. The boats started at about 6 o'clock, in the Macao Passage, some way up it, and the winning post was at the Fort. Contrary to expectation, the Sampan, from the very starting, took the lead and encreased her distance from her adversary whilst going on towards the winning post, which she reached in 14 minutes beating her adversary by 35 seconds, or about 10 boats lengths. The Chinese, from all we have heard, (not being ourselves sufficiently amateur of these things to be able to judge) pulled beautifully, whilst the Lascars, confident of success, are said to have anticipated their earnings, and run up a score on their account in long-lane during the day.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—are not so much enquired for at the high price at which the only small parcels that are in the market are held. COTTON YARN is also declining.

WOOLLENS. LONGELLS continue firm, there being no fresh arrivals. SPANISH STRIPES are also beginning to improve, the markets in the interior being reported more favorable.

SUNDRY PRODUCE.—Pepper keeps up and small parcels sell 4 @ 4 Pls. Betelnut is held at 3.10 a 3.20, but there are few purchasers.

COTTON.—There has been a decline in all descriptions during the week, in the best description of both, Bengal and Bombay of 2 or 3 mace, and in the lower qualities of 5 or 7 and with little disposition to purchase at the reduced rates. The only sales of any consequence have been of two parcels of Bengal, one of about 1300 bales sent here from the Coast and the other of about 1000 bales Surat and Banda at from 9.3 a 10.2 and the other of about 1000 bales Jalone and Banda at from 9.3 a 9.8, an average of about 9.5, we hear.

OPIUM.—The stoppage of the trade continues as strictly noted quite as before, and the only transactions are therefore trifling deliveries to junks outside. Several small vessels being chartered for the East coast, where however the Mandarins are stated also to be becoming troublesome. The deliveries to the 23d curt. ACCOUNT OF THE CONQUEST OF THE MIOU-TSEU.

Translated from "Memoires concernant les Chinois par les Missionaires de Pekin".

The Miout-tse, a nation of mountaineers, of whom we now speak, formed two small states on the frontiers of Sse-chuen and Kweichow, provinces of China, of the size of about the dukedom of Lorraine; one was called Siao-keng-chuen, and the other Ta-keng-chuen. Each had their king or sovereign prince.

About 25 years ago they made some in roads into China, and war was resolved against them. The first general who marched against them did not deserve success, and the Emperor had his head cut off. Another, more dexterous, prevailed on them, by means of presents, to return to their mountains, and good care was taken to let the Emperor know that they had been vanquished, and submitted now so his government. But five or six years after new hostilities broke out, at which the Emperor was extremely angry, and it is probable that he from that time conceived the idea to exterminate them. He surround-d their mountains by three armies, each of about 40,000 soldiers.

The General Wang-fuh had orders to penetrate into these difficult mountains, and the Miou-tse but feebly defended the first pass. After having made good their passage, the Chinese found themselves in a mountain gorge, entirely surrounded by impassable rocks and mountains; when the Miou-tse appeared in great numbers, and, after the Chinese had been attenuated by hunger, fell upon them and not a single man escaped. It was only several years after that the fate of Wang-fuh became known.

Meanwhile two other generals were punished for not having afforded due assistance to Wangfuh. The one was strangled, and the other exiled to Hlo. After this the Emperor appointed Akwee Commander in Chief of all the troops. No choice could have been better; he was a man of invincible perseverance and coolness, undeterred by any thing, and not even withheld by the fear of the Emperor himself, if the good of the service required it. He entered by the same route as Wang-fuh, but he took care to occupy the neighbouring eminences, and to leave no enemy in his rear. The Miou-tse from this beginning, found that they had to deal with a more dangerous enemy; they performed prodigies of valour, the women fought like the men; and it is not known how many Chinese perished here. Akwee maintained himself in the first gorge, and prepared to force the next pass. The Miou-tse built new fortresses on the eminences. Akwee was by no means precipitate; he remained two or three months near a rock, and when he at last found an accessible spot, he would profit by a fog and make his soldiers take possession of it, and so soon as they found themselves of sufficient force, they attacked the Miou-tse, who, being but few in number as compared to the Chinese, could only defend each mountain by a very small number of warriors. A step once made, was always one step forward; Akwee never retreated; by means of this manoeuvre, in a year and a half he had advanced 10 or 12 leagues, and reached the capital of Siao-kengchuen, Maino by name; he took it by storm; and the young king, Seng-ke-sang, escaped in time. His father who, several years before had become insane, thought himself safe in his retreat; he was mistaken; he was made a prisoner and sent to Peking where he met with but sorry treatment.

Akwee slowly pushed Seng-ke-sang from mountain to mountain, from gorge to gorge, to the very end of his small country. There he threw himself into a fortified temple (Miao) and defended it with desperation; but he was obliged at last to give way to the superior numerous of the Chinese, and fled into Ta-keng-chuen, by a defile so narrow that only two could walk abreast. His lands had fallen entirely into the hands of the Chinese, but the war is not at end as long as the King is at large; check and check mate must be given.

The Emperor gave order to require from the King of Ta-keng-chuen the delivery to his troops, of his enemy, and that, in case of refusal, Akwee was immediately to carry the war into his country. Surveng, or Surviveng as he is called by others, King of Ta-keng-chuen, was much embarrassed; he was only 20 years old, and the success of the Chinese arms had much alarmed him. His uncle wished to give way to the Emperor, but a Lama, related to Seng-ke-sang and General of Ta-kengchuen as well as a Chinese mandarin, traitor to the Emperor, overruled him in the Council. It was hoped that the mountains of this country being even more inaccessible than those of Siao-keng-chuen, the Chinese would tire of the war at last; the whole country was bristling with forts; and passes were rendered more difficult and mountains more inaccessible than before.

Akwee was not alarmed at any thing; he entered the defile following Seng-ke-sang; little by little he gained territory, and was ever advancing in spite of all the enemy's efforts; he insensibly approached the capital Leuei. The other Chinese armies also advances from different sides, and this illfated city seemed to be at their mercy. At that time, the Emperor, considering the war as at an end, sent the father Felix d'Arocha, at this day president of the mathematical board, to lay down a chart of the country. This dear and old companion of mine has confirmed to me all the Chinese had said of the country of Keng-chuen, of its impracticable roads, its dreadful precipices, it's cataracts, it's mountains, and of it's really inaccessible mountains. In passing by, he saw a small fortress on one of the most elevated, and he was told how the Chinese obtained possession of it by a lucky accident, after having, during two months in vain tried, by all that valour and skill can attempt, to reduce it. Some soldiers of the watch having heard very early in the morning the noise of human footsteps, approached softly; they saw something move; two or three of the most active, by means of spikes fixed to their shoes, climbed the mountain in the direction of these sounds; they found them to have been caused by a woman fetching water, and they stopped her. Examined as to the state of the garrison that had so long defended the fort, she answered:" I alone am that garrison; I wanted water, and came for it here where I did not expect to find you." She then conducted them by a hidden path to the fortress were she really had been alone during many weeks sometimes firing a few muskets shots, sometimes rolling fragments of rock upon the invaders. Akwee and the other generals received father d'Arocha with all respect due to a person coming immediately from the Emperor; but the fatigue and bad climate disabled him from accomplishing the object he had in view, and the generals themselves, from friendship for him, begged of the Emperor to recall him. Father Arocha left Akwee on a mountain which commanded Leuei, capital of Ta-keng-chuen Another army was on the other side, on the opposite bank of a river, which it was about to cross, and in 4 or 5 days more, it was expected, the place would be taken. Seng-ke-sang was dead; Surveng left alone, made the last efforts to save his capital, and it was only 8 or 9 months after, that he determined secretly to leave it, to retire to Kuruh in last part in well as his last resources. The Chinese encountering no longer any resistance, made themselves masters of the place, where they found nothing but empty houses.

IMPORTANT FROM TEXAS & MEXICO.

Our New Orleans accounts make it more than probable that Gen. Bravo has resolved to remain with his troops at Matamoras, until the important issue of the presidential contest shall be known. He is, it would seem, naturally inimical to Santa Anna in consequence of the latter having intrigued himself into the controul of the dominant party. Meanwhile Santa Anna is watching the movement of the waters at his domicile of Manga de Clavo near Vera Cruz, and it is believed contemplates union with Bravo. It is supposed the two together may influence the army and thus put down the present government. By the debates in the Mexican Congress it would appear that Santa Anna has numerous partizans, some of whom uphold him as the defender of religion, others say he will re-promulgate the old federation of 1824. The rumors of the threatened march of the Mexican invading army upon Texas seem unfounded. They will not budge if there's any hope of reconciliation, as the minds are constantly haunted by the reminiscences of San Jacinto.

Meanwhile the Texians are fully prepared for the conflict.—That they feel themselves abundantly able to cope with their adversaries, is fully manifest from the fact that colonel A Thruston, the Commissary General of Texas, now at New Orleans has received orders from his government to suspend the recruiting service for the present. Those recruits who arrived previous to March 1st, were by law to receive 1950 acres of land for their services during the war, or for two years a bounty of 640 acres in addition, and an advance of two months pay and rations. One of the unfortunate results however of this order has been that the fine company of Capt. Garrett (many of them from New York) just arrived at New Orleans, have been disbanded for want of means to procure a passage to Texas. We should imagine that the sincere friends of Texas in New Orleans, would not permit such a circumstance to occur.

Should Bravo, however, come, the Texians will encounter him on the La Baca, where the regular army are encamped 2500 strong. In addition to this force they have at San Antonio, Galveston and Gutlad, 500 more, the whole backed by a militia force of 3000. The New Orleans commercial herald, however, computes this latter at 1500 to 1000.

Mr. Butler, late American Consul at Mexico, has arrived from there at New Orleans, and states that he knows from what he himself saw at Matamoras, that the Mexican troops there are neither well clothed or disciplined.

The desire of the Texians probably will be accomplished without any exertion on their part, by the internal dissentions, produced by the release of Santa Anna, thus shown to have been a wise measure on the part of Pres. Houston whether the Mexican Ex-president fulfils his secret promises or not. The conquest of the republican diadem of Mexico is to him much dearer at this moment than that of Texas.

The released Texian prisoners arrived at New Orleans, contradict the exaggerated accounts which have been circulated relative to their ill-treatment. They had to labor hard, but had plently of food but were never in chains. They were released through the instrumentality of Gen. Bravo. Among them are G. Smith of New York. Before the Atlantic sailed from Matamoros, which was March 20th, Gen. Bravo had begun to cross his camp equipage, on his way, to Texas, to be followed by the army about the last of March. We are pained to see that to the disgrace of certain persons, the Mexican troops at Matamoros have been abundantly supplied with provisions by arrivals from New Orleans. It is also again asserted, that the Mexican government have made a loan of a million and a half of dollars from a merchants. (mortgaging the customs of Matamoros and Tampico for payment) to be received in $150,000 monthly instalments. A Mexican officer of rank stated that it would be the first object of the army to occupy Bexar, Goliad and Thompson, which he described as the keys to Texas; and having possession of those places, the army would secure points d'appui where they conduct their operations at leisure, whilst they would by this means hold the Texian army in check.

It was also announced that Gen. Bravo had been instructed to propose terms of reconciliation to the Texians, granting them whatever they may demand, short of independence and dismemberment.

The Diario del Governo of Tampico, of March 3d, recommends the Mexican government to loan 30 millions dollars of some foreign power. An important item is the following, in a letter from Tampico, dated March 18th.

The English vice consul at Tampico, Mr. Crawford, will shortly pass through New Orleans, on his way to Texas, where he is ordered by his government, in order to make a report as to the state of the country.

RECRUITS FOR TEXAS.—The letter referred to of Colonel Thruston, dated March 24th at New Orleans, and published in the True American, says that not withstanding the suspension of the recruiting service, those "who have already entered for five years or for the war, and have made their arrangements to leave for Texas with arms, provisions and clothing, will be enrolled and furnished transportation from this point. Recruiting officers will be governed accordingly."

A general order from the Texian war department, signed by W. S. Fisher, dated March 14th, confirms this and says "none hereafter will be received or accepted in Texas but such as come by the express orders of Col. A. S. Thruston, commissary general of the army of Texas, who has had his orders from this department, and is required to execute them strictly."

Provisions, it seems, are more wanted in Texas than recruits. A letter from thence, dated March 10th, says:

"People are rushing into the country from all quarters, thinking their money will do everything. They are mistaken. 'Tis not so here. Flour, meal, corn, pork, bacon, lard, beans, peas, potatoes, rice, apples, and every other kind of eatables can do more than money. Our army is composed of gallant young men under fine discipline, and only want to be kept well supplied to give a good account of any Mexican force that can come against them. Tell all who come to assist us to bring all necessary supplies with them."

THE MEXICAN CONGRESS AND SANTA ANNA.—An important paper printed in French in Mexico, and called the Universal, has been received by the New Orleans Bee. By the debate of the Mexican Congress in its columns it would seem that there was a majority vote in favor of the necessity of a new election. This looks well for the resumption of the office by Santa Anna. Any promises he may have made at Washington are considered to have been compulsory and null. A committee through Mr. Chas. M. Bustamante reported Feb 17 to the Mexican Congress, that they did not believe Santa Anna had any intention to destroy the sovereignty and integrity of the territory. The committee propose, if he has made any treaty, that Congress should annul it, and thus relieve Santa Anna's honor by disqualifying him from complying with his pledges and guarantees. A decree was passed calling on Santa Anna for a full account of all his proceedings since the defeat at San Jacinto; that meanwhile he cannot be reinstated in command until tried. The provision declaring he had lost his civic rights was rejected. That making his engagements with Texas null was adopted. Also that declaring him no longer President. The Congress seemed to be impressed with a fear of Santa Anna's power, and that if he assumed the executive chair, he would annul the present constitution and could not be punished.—New York evening star, 13th April

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Sir,—It is plain from the recent acts, that the Superintendents of British trade believe themselves in possesion of unjustifiable powers. The receipt of supposed British subjects (Lascars) in custody, and retention of them as prisoners for the Chinese, the correspondence as to the outside fleet; and the affairs on board the Abercrombie Robinson, leave no room to doubt this.

I therefore think that it would be but a piece of fair dealing to all concerned, if not even an essential duty, that the subjects of Great Britain should be officially informed of the standing held by these gentlemen, thus standing forward to impose authority, if not law, in a foreign country. The denial or withholding of this, if such power is possessed, would now be a manifest and gross injustice.

If such power does not legally exist, and we know that, to the last moment of Lord Napier's life, he had none such, it might be as well to avoid the assertion of it.

I cannot believe that the late acts, above named, are legal; nor do I believe that the people at home are prepared to be told that the British factory, with the Union flag flying before it, has been turned into a Chinese prison; nor that the "King's Cutter," as it is called, should be a floating gaol, for men threatened with transportation for refusing to obey a person whose right to interfere they could not understand. I, of course, do not presume to say anything as to the alleged mutiny on board; but confine my remarks to parties interfering.

As to the "outside fleet," it appears to me that any King's officer cannot do better than follow the example of the E. I. Company's representatives when applied to on the subject. "We have nothing to do with them—they are beyond our power—if, as you say, they are acting illegally, in your territories, you can, of course, drive them away, or act as you please; but it is out of our power to interfere, and, if we did, we should not be obeyed."

I am Sir,

A BRITISH SUBJECT.

September, 29th 1837.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Mr. Editor,—Your criticism on a Letter by "One of many" in your No. before the last requires some notice, lest those in Britain should be of opinion your readers are with you on these points.

What I complain of is an apparent desire to gloss over or screen the present British ministry from their due share of blame for the ruinous state of the Tea trade, and in your endeavor to do so, you very palpably misstate mercantile facts known to us all. You are pleased to say as the present low prices of Teas "are heavy sales similar prices on the whole of the last two years for our products are not complained by original and by them." The chief cause of these, it must be allowed, is the present commercial distress, I cannot no doubt by a too great facility of credit of I over Europe and America, and England has not only to bear the heavy loss merchants have incurred among themselves by the shock that credit has received, but part of the American losses will also fall on them, and the great power drawn to the United States for different speculations, most of which were losing ones, not coming back to England at the rate anticipated, the needed thereby there naturally becomes greatly increased," now this won't in the least avail you, because looking back to the Price Currents of London before the panic in money took place, say August 1836, Canton Bohea was saleable at 20 per lb., which must pay for expence of carriage home, and the low Congou were at 16d which is not worse 3d per lb. of Canton prime cost, when Twankay Silk is quoted at 29/6 @ 30s per lb. and it is as a proverb here that the Canton speculators in 1836 were saved from ruin by the profits on their silks meeting the heavy losses on their teas.

You hint at encouragement as thing "we count to say in answer to "A British trader" that only a portion of the losses and disasters which the China trade has suffered lately, can be laid at the door of the Mandarinate, whose neglect of this extensive branch of trade, is not giving its proper encouragement"; now the history of trade for all ages shows that a healthy trade requires no encouragement and that encouragement given to an unhealthy handling, is tied and many times a way; therefore I have no fancy for the Queen being moved to go to the drawing room in a petticoat entirely made of Twankay Silk, or my Lady Palmerston (if there is such a person) being petitioned to fill her Tea caddy with Canton Bohea Tea.

I conceive the supply of Britain with Tea and other Chinese commodities, and vice versa, to afford the basis of a healthy trade.—So as a Canton British Resident I will shortly tell you what I do want? and what I do not want? and I leave to your readers the reasonableness of the propositions that any minister of Great Britain attentive to, and informed of, the interests of the crown he serves, to yield to them.

What I do want is that Chinese trade shall be left to itself; no interference whatever.

What I do not want is I am sorry to say more lengthy.

I do not want a minister of the crown coming down to pass a Bill through the commons to pledge himself to no more duties than in time of the Hon. Company's monopoly;—and another minister to break such pledge! so putting a duty of 200 per cent on all low teas and making them WORTHLESS!

I do so want the Attorney General to be tampered with to wrest from its plain purpose an act of Parliament forbidding the Honorable East India Company to trade in China and by doing so setting up a powerful set of bill brokers and money lenders in Canton enhancing every Chinese produce, lowering every British one.

I do no want such changes in duties of teas (and unannounced) as creates desperate gambling and when the unfortunate players are at their utmost need, advantage is taken of them by the British Government as in the disgraceful affair of Bohea 1d per lb. one million of duty.—wrenched unnecessarily from a labouring set of merchants.

I want the Government of England not to tamper with the Bank of England to derange one whole bill system; no where so severely felt as when the parties (as we are) far from the heart. Let the British Government abstain from these things and for our part my Lord Palmerston may by protocols, or equally useless commissions, costing £ 60,000 per annum, play as many fantastic tricks as he pleases in China, the British community paying therefore.

"A BRITISH TRADER."

PUFFING.

The following ridiculous, though rather clever puff of Mr. Pidding's celebrated Hongsee's mixture of 40 different kinds, of black tea, we find in the Liverpool Albion of 13th May. We wonder whether Hongsee is still in the habit of making this celebrated mixture for his own use: his friendship for Mr. P.dding in letting him into the secret is will worth recording, and we think it advisable for Howqua to institute proceedings against such a mode of his name without his consent, in England, in which case probably both plaintiff's and defendant's protestations would be found equally effective.

HOWQUA'S MIXTURE.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT, MONDAY.

SITTING AT NOW

After the rising of the Court, Mr WILLCOCK, (with whom was Mr. Taylor,) on behalf of the plaintiff, (a commander in the East India Company's maritime service, moved the Vice-Chancellor at his private house for a special injunction to restrain the defendants a grocer, trading under the firm of Wilkinson and Co. 243 and 244, Bow street, in the Borough, from selling tea under the name of Howqua's mixture, or Mowqua's small-leaf gunpowder, or in packages imitating those of the plaintiff. The affidavits of the plaintiff and others, which were read in support of the motion, stated, that the plaintiff for twenty years, during which he had traded to China and intimately known Howqua, the chief of the Hong merchants of Canton, and had become acquainted with a mixture of black teas made by Howqua under his own private care, and with the chop or marks which distinguished the different qualities of teas forming that mixture; that for several years past sold that mixture, both in chests, under the name of Howqua's mixture, and also a peculiar kind of fine flavoured green tea, under the name of Howqua's small-leaf gunpowder. That such teas were in demand and sold by Thomas Lumley and Son, commissioners, 27 King William street, city; and C. Verry, 4 and Confectioner, 215, Regent street; that a large quantity of these teas had been supplied to the plaintiff and his agents for the use of the Majesty, and that the plaintiff had lately observed that the defendant was selling teas of a grade different and inferior quality under the names of Howqua's mixture and Howqua's small-leaf gunpowder. It appeared, from the affidavits of Mr. Wm. Nixon, tea-dealer, Mr William Satcher, wholesale tea-dealer, and Mr. George Hampton, who are most conversant and capable to form judgment on the comparative merits and different qualities of tea, that their skill enabled them to discover the real Howqua's mixture of the plaintiff with the Howqua's small-leaf gunpowder of the plaintiff. If with the defendant Co.'s Howqua's small-leaf gunpowder; and that the plaintiff's teas of were superior quality, whilst that of the defendant was bad in the appearance. His Honour then ordered the injunction to be made.

THE GOLCONDA.

The Golconda, Bell, from Bombay, met with bad weather as the following statement and extract from Capt Bell's letter to the consignees here will show.

EXTRACT FROM CAPT BELL'S LETTER.

Anjer road 8th August 1837.

"I left Macao roads on the 18th June and had a very fair passage down the China sea to the 3 N. Long. 109 East where we found the winds on the 27th June and one day's calm from the straits of Minduro, when it came on to blow a gale from the W. & W.; we double reefed the topsails upon royal yards and made sure, on the night of the 27th the wind moderated and continued so until a little after daylight on the 29th, when the wind shifted to S. S. W., and by the time the mainsail was up had the yards braced round, which took about 15 minutes, it blew a g le of wind. All hands were called on deck, to close topsails, not having time to close-reef up for it. It blowing a complete hurricane the first time. At this time we had three bells of five at the Minduro, one in each, which appeared to be broken the lowers, and much required for a long passage. In consequence of the gale coming suddenly, our three topsails were blown away, and I certainly expected to see our masts go every moment during about 10 hours whilst the very heavy gale lasted—had it continued to blow a hard, we should certainly have been dismasted for our engine was gone, and we been a wreck ship, seeing it is, we should have gone over. The weather became more moderate on the 29th, when we bent our two best top sails, which put them very strong, we were obliged to unbend and repair alternately in the Minduro straits where we met with heavy squalls and rain, and foul winds.

"I enclose you an account of a Coral shoal the Golconda struck on in the middle of the Minduro sea, it is quite never discovered before, and, as I am quite sure of it's position by observation and bearings, you had best have it published. We struck very heavily on it, for the ship going hard home at the time, struck in three fathoms and ran 3 more with the same, and, the ship's draft being 18 6 8 inches, it is quite plain that it is very near. The ship makes no more water than before, but I expect she has bilged her fore foot and false keel. The last voyage we passed about 3 miles to the eastward of it. At that time our draft was 21 feet. At that draft the ship might have been into it, for we then had strong breezes with a heavy swell."

GOLCONDA SHOAL.

SOOLOO SEA.

Appears not to have been known until the Ship Golconda struck on it July 5th 1837, of which Capt. Bell gives the following account.

"3 p. m. the crew just finished dinner when suddenly we found the ship scrape the ground and looked over the side and saw a Coral reef; ordered the courses to be hauled up and the main and mizen top-sails to be laid aback, but the ship going 5 knots at the time before we got the top sails aback or the head have, she struck the second time very heavy, which stopped the ship's way and she rebounded with a heavy roll to windward; then the sails caught the breeze, she gave one roll to leeward and passed over into deeper water; by that time the lead was have in 4 less 4 fathoms, and where the ship struck was only three fathoms the ship's draft being then 18 feet 6 inches and the water very smooth; at the time when lying to on the shoal took the following bearings, from Mount Passy from the deck N.E.½E; the eastern of the Canyanes islands from the topsail yard S.S.W; sent the cutter round to sound, but found no long water than where the ship struck and evidently we had passed over the shoalest part and near the middle of the shoal which extends about 3 miles north and south, and the same nearly east and west; found the water deeper ahead to the southward, filled and stood to the southward with the lead going and deepened gradually from 4 less 4 fathom to 12 fathoms. Then hove the deep and lead in 20 fms. steered south from the shoal about 8 miles till 5 p. m. near the Canyanes islands from the deck S.W.½S. the high land near point Nasa N.E.½ in 50 fathoms and no bottom; longitude and latitude at noon by good observation 121° 32' 00" E. & 10° 0' 00" N. run from noon to 5 p. m. when the ship struck about 13 miles N.E.½ E. course will place where the ship struck in 121° 40' 00" E and 9° 50' N. and the bearings give nearly the same position.

On my passage in 1834 I passed about 9 miles to the westward of the above shoal in the night; at that time the Golconda's draft was 21 feet 6 inches. Had she struck the shoal then, the ship must have been lost, for we had fresh breezes with a heavy swell on at that time.

CANTON PRESS,

7th October, 1837.

The free-trade between Canton and China since it's opening in April 1834.

So very different has been the result of the opening of China to the Free-trade to those interested in it to what had been anticipated by them, that an investigation into the causes of this, at the end of the third, and the beginning of the new and fourth season, will at the present moment we hope be welcome.

The most important articles of export from here being at present Tea and Raw Silk we shall confine our remarks to them. Since lately after the Company had ceased buying tea in China, (for in spite of the Charter they still deal here in money and exchanges), private individuals immediately despatched cargoes to England, even on the day on which the new charter expired, both of silk and teas, and these arriving while the high Company's prices for the latter were still given by the consumer, sold to very good advantage though the season being then ended, the bulk of the shipments of free-trade teas were not made until from October 1834, and most consignments of that year to England did well, thereby increasing the anxiety of merchants and speculators to enter on a trade which promised such good return for the capital employed. Mean while the Company, under the pretext of affording facility to the free-trade established a Finance Committee here, to draw on Bengal, and to remit to England in bills payment of which was secured by consignments of raw silk and tea being hypothecated for them. At first the opposition the free-traders made to this arrangement was but partial and all the houses in England, looking upon it as affording them the means of gaining greater profits by entering into the trade on a larger scale than they otherwise could have done, applauded the measure. It was however soon discovered to have a very pernicious effect upon the trade, by generating undue speculation, and by raising Chinese produce beyond it's natural value, in some quarters of throwing, at the time of the arrival of the produce, an immense sum of money into the market, which having been collected during the 6 previous months, had lain inactive in the treasury all that while. These consequences became apparent during the season of 1835-6, since up to the beginning of the 3d season the increase of shipments upon what the Company's usually were, was rather more than 17 000,000 lbs. including the shipments of upwards of 8 Millions lbs between September and April 1836 the whole exports of the free-trade, from April 1834 to September 1835 amounting to 31 000 000 lbs. whilst the Company's exports did generally not exceed 23 000 000 lbs. We have no doubt that many were led to hope that the reduced prices at which the free-trader could afford to supply the consumer would cause a much greater consumption in England than what has actually been the case, it having increased in the proportion of about 25 per cent only, though, if the duty were on ad-valorem one as in the Company's time of 96 per cent upon market prices, the free-trade tea would in every instance have been full 50 per cent cheaper than the Company's. Instead of an ad-valorem duty, a graduated scale of fixed duty was levied, the lowest of which being 1s. 6d. per lb was fully equal to at least 100 per cent. This system, not working well in practice, on account of the difficulty to draw a line between the different qualities of tea, 1. 1. to determine at what point good Bohea became Congou, and low Congou Bohea &c., and the duties on all tea were equalized, this new law to take effect on the 1st of August 1836 since when a duty of 1s 6d on all descriptions of tea has been paid. The injustice of a duty levied indiscriminately on an article worth from 10d to 6s per lb. must be evident, and cannot but act restrictively on it's consumption, where the poor, or rather the labouring classes are made to pay upwards of 300 per cent while their rich neighbour is allowed to sip his tea, pay in a duty which frequently does not amount to even 30 per cent. Besides it could never be expected that a reduction in the duty on high teas would much increase the quantity consumed, the wealthy caring little what price they pay for a thing which is so very trifling a part of their expenditure. It is the labouring man to whom tea is a necessary of life, and of whose daily expenditure the purchase of it, forms a considerable item, who must, when dear, submit to drink it weaker than he likes, whilst at a moderate duty he would, by laying out the same amount of money, have much greater enjoyment, and many are deterred altogether from it's use by it's high price, who, when cheaper, would use it in preference to their present fare. We may therefore presume that the consumption of free-trade tea, had a judicious system of levying the duty been adopted, would have amounted to nearer 60 Millions of pounds, than not quite 40 as it at present is—and in this case the hopes of the importers would have been realized and the immense stock now on hand in England have been reduced long ago.

Another cause of the free-traders expectations as to the prosperity of the trade having been defeated, but which certainly existed before they entered on the trade was the stock, equal to a year's consumption in the Company's ware-houses; the manner of the disposal of this stock was altogether left at the option of the Company, and it ever hung threatening over the speculator in England, damping his zeal, and arresting his wish to lay out capital in an article the price of which might at any moment be seriously affected by the whim of the rulers in Leadenhall street.

Under these auspices began the season of 1836-36. Reports of prices from England were still good, those from the interior of China were that the latter was too low to allow of it's transport to Canton for some time to come, and that moreover the crop had been scanty; the Company's treasury was invitingly open at a lower exchange than private merchants would draw at, and to get at it's contents, to have a chop of tea appraised by the teataster, was quite an successful to the opening of the robber's cave. The returns of the small supplies expected to be shipped during that season kept prices up in England, in spite of the heavy stock already accumulating, and in spite of the consumption not increasing as anticipated, but when the heavy supplies at last reached Canton they were all bought up at a considerable advance upon former prices already dearer than those of the Company formerly; and 43,050,663 lbs were in that season shipped from here to England. When these reached home, prices began to give way, and particularly those of the lower teas which no longer paid cost and charges, and even many of the better continued no longer to be remunerating. The new duty on Bohea, of 1s. 1d. instead of 1s. 6d. unless the teas were cleared before the 1st of August, made the holders come under an out lay of 200 per cent more than what the teas cost them, and many unable to make such disbursement sold at very ruinous prices, which naturally also effected the lower Congous. The consequence was that, for the ensuing season of 1836-37, no more Boheas were manufactured, and if they were at all, it was under the more imposing name of Congou. But in this season particularly was felt the pernicious influence of the Company's advances, aggravated by the manner in which they had been apportioned, and by their issue being limited to the end of the year. The Chinese tea-men, who had during the preceding season gained very considerable profits on their tea, had been more very sanguine; contracts had been made between Hong-merchants and foreigners, and every body had been as anxious as possible to secure the greatest share of tea for the season beginning in October 1836. The natural consequence was that in the tea districts prices rose very much, and the tea when it arrived here cost much more than the price at which the contracts had been made with foreigners, which could, from the system in which most of the Hongs found themselves, not be fulfilled. It soon became apparent that one of the most active Hongs was in a state of bankruptcy, owing immense sums to foreigners, and largely also to Chinese. This event made the Teamen more distrustful of the Hongs than ever, and they refused giving up a single chop of tea without payment being secured them. The consequence of this was that a great part of the business was transacted direct between foreigners and teamen, the Hong merchants receiving only a commission of so many tenls per Picul of tea as a compensation for duty and charges and commissions. But the teamen were well aware of there being a great number of ships at Whampoa all waiting for Cargo for England, they knew also that the money necessary for the Shipments would only be forthcoming until the last day of the year; they well knew that every body was anxious to load his ships which would otherwise remain at Whampoa for an indefinite time at a heavy demurrage, and that foreigners must passes themselves of the teas, coute qui coute, before the end of the year. The consequence was that they enforced prices fully 25 per Cent higher than during the preceding season had been obtained; a general rush was made by shippers, as soon as prices had been fixed upon the teachops & the Company's treasury, & by far the greatest proportion of teas shipped for England this season was on board at Whampoa before the 1st of January, at purchased at exorbitant prices in the face of discouraging advices from home. The consequence was an almost immediate considerable fall in all the lower descriptions of teas, the few chops of better teas keeping up owing to their scarcity. But after January the demand for teas at almost any prices naturally fell off and but few shipments, and fewer bona fide purchases were made since that time. The quantity of teas shipped in the season just ended is .... lbs 37,841,506

Grand Total since the opening of the free-trade } lbs. 131,938,783

It will from this be seen that the shipments of the last season were some what short of the computed annual consumption in England, but in spite of this, these shipments met with a very bad reception in England, where prices had, owing to the commercial distress fallen still lower, and sales could only be effected at very heavy losses, whilst the stocks on hand remained very great, those of the Company being still 9,767,041 lbs, whilst those of the free-trade, after all the ships of the last season shall have arrived, may be computed at about 34 millions, leaving both together, taking the consumption for the year at 40 millions, a stock of 94 millions on hand, or sufficient for 7 months consumption, when the teas of the new beginning season shall arrive in Canton, but with the very bad prospects before them, the exporters have not made offers yet, whilst the tea-men, hoping that the Company will again take their part against the interests of that body's own countrymen, talk of very high prices. Meantime, instead of the harbour being full of shipping, anxious to get cargoes for home, there are very few only, and it is not yet known in what manner the Company's advances are this year to be apportioned, though it is generally believed it will be done in a manner less prejudicial to the British trade. There is therefore every prospect that the British will, during this season, force down the pretensions of the Chinese, and that prices will open at a considerable reduction upon those given last year, though probably that reduction will not be so much as the latest advices from England warrant.

The new silk trade has had to contend with the same difficulty as the tea-trade, as to the Company's advances, which have had the effect of raising prices far beyond what they would otherwise have been, and promoted the shipments of quantities much greater than have been exported from China at any previous time. The quantities shipped have been from 1684—35	about	6,000	Piculs.

showing a very rapid increase upon each season over the previous one. There are many causes which may affect the value of silk, beyond the supplies from China, this article not being like tea, exclusively produced here; and short crops in the south of Europe, the increased consumption, and the general commercial prosperity which had indirect means speculation, had raised the price for the best China silk to as high as 30s per lb in the summer of 1836, and this news reaching here in the beginning of last season, competition to secure as much as possible of this valuable article soon drove prices to a height at which they had not been during a great many years before. The large supplies shipped from here and other countries, a stagnation in the trade of manufactured silk, and finally, the commercial distress, on began to act injuriously on the value of silk at home, and it is now quoted by the last advices to be difficult of sale at 15s per lb, whilst a year before it was worth double that price. Of this the consequence here ought to be very great reduction in price also, but for the parcels, holder s arrived, the holders ask prices nearly as high as those obtained last year, saying that they have paid so dear for their silk in the interior that they cannot afford to sell at less. That they will have to submit to less than can be no doubt.

We have thus given a short sketch of the Free-trade since it's opening, so far as the two principal articles are concerned, and we hope to have shewn that the losses sustained by the Tea-trade have been chiefly caused by the following;

1st. By the arbitrary manner in which the E. I. Company may dispose of their stock of old teas.

2dly. By the establishment of Company's Finance Committee here, which hushed the effect of inducing undue population and of raising prices of teas far beyond what they would otherwise have been,

3dly, and this is the most serious of all our objections, by the high duties imposed on teas, and the manner in which they are levied. We hope that this matter will be vigorously taken upon hand by the India and China Association and that the interests of the Free-trade may be strenuously enforced and upheld in Parliament. Before this is done, no relief can be expected.

We had just written the above, when we heard that the Company's treasury had suddenly been closed against the receipt of cash for bills on Bengal—this without any previous notice has as yet been given, or any intimation having been made, and on the eve of the despatch of one ship for Bengal and another for Bombay, both of which were probably intended to convey as remittances bills for which the cash would have been sent in this day. But no; the Treasury is closed; "you who wish to send your money may go disappointed"; though for the last four or five months we have been drawing regularly, and accustomed you so to do as one treasury as a safe means of conveying your money to Bengal, we think it no longer to pay 4 bills, and have taken care to present you at making any other arrangements, you all the while reposing your fault in us, by telling you of our determination so just at the very moment, and thus almost the only one, at which this would seriously have inconvenienced you. Such we presume, would about be the reasoning in upholding such sudden acts. Can such a system be longer tolerated, while it for the many advantages the Company derives, holds out no safety in their transactions to the Opium and Canton dealers, to whom alone the Finance Committee may have been of questionable advantage, and does most positive injury to every other individual connected with the British trade.

The arrivals during the week (two only, one from Lombock, the other from Manila) have added nothing to our very scanty stock of news. None of the so much desired arrivals from England direct have taken place, nor even from Bombay or Calcutta, from either of which places we might have had the overland despatches of 1st of June by this time. We suppose that the northerly monsoon must have set in very early this season in the China sea.

A few days ago, two Chinese returning from abroad disembarked at Whampoa, from a foreign ship, we believe, to go on shore, one taking with him his property, a chest containing money. It appears that before reaching the land, his companion made a effort to throw the owner of the chest into the water and so drown him, whilst he escaped with the money immediately after landing. We do not believe as the circumstances were effected, the drowned man's name and family not being known, nor his body as yet found. The Whampoa comprador to whom the boat belonged in which the deed was committed, has been taken before the Canton authorities and is at present in confinement, whilst diligent search is made for the murderer.

DIED.

At Canton, on the 3d of October, EDWARD PEDOVAR ALLEYN Esq., formerly for many years Surgeon of the H. C. S. General Kyd; much esteemed and deeply lamented by an extensive circle of friends to whom he was endeared by the amenity of his manners, and the warm-hearted kindliness of his nature. His professional abilities were of a high order, and always freely at command, when applied to, from whatever quarter. During the suspension of the East India Company's trade in 1833, Mr. Alleyn was the only individual of their service, permitted, by the Factory, to remain here, for the purpose of affording medical advice, at the general request of the Community, in consequence of the serious illness of the practising physician of the place. And his gratuitous services, on that occasion were acknowledged by the presentation of a handsome piece of plate, with a complete address, from the American merchants of whom Society at Canton was then chiefly composed.

Many Chinese merchants who valued his friendship and benefited by his kindness, participate in the general sorrow occasioned by his death.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton goods.—Of Longcloths the importations have been very small, and the last arrival will command good prices. Chintzes are also enquired for.

Cotton Yarn.—has rather declined.

Woollens.—Longcloths,—in good demand—there being few on hand. The advance in Spanish Stripes noticed in our last has hardly been maintained, and we have heard of no sales. Camlets, Dutch and English are very depressed.

Straits Produce.—The principal holder is still asking, we hear 24 for Bancas, but none; arrels at Macao have been sold a 3 @ 3.1c.

Pepper is coming in small quantities.

Tin is steady at a trifling change.

Rice.—Paddy, lower, the weather continuing most favorable for the coming crop.

Cotton.—The only sales reported to us during the week are one 1000 bales good Omrawuttee @ 10, and 1000 bales good Jahore @ 10.—and 800 Cuttchee @ 9¾. The latter sale was for the supply of a Chinchew Junk, and the demand since has been languid. Several small sales have been made of inferior descriptions at our lowest quotations. The stock is not heavy, but speculators are deterred from coming forward by the expected arrivals; it was estimated on the 1st inst.

Opium.—Although not a great call can exist for the consumption of China, and the neighbouring districts, there has been a good deal of activity in the market both for shipments to the Eastward, and delivery to the westward of Macao—but without any improvement in price, the great object now of holders being to realize as much as possible their heavy stocks, before further arrivals, to which end lots could be easily purchased, we believe, under our quotation. For deliveries during the last month see above.

EXPORTS.

Raw Silk.—The Nankin silk continues to arrive slowly, but nothing has yet been done in it.

Tea.—We have no transactions to report.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

JAPAN.

Mr. Editor.—We in Canton being the nearest and most influential commercial body of we term taking an interest in Japan, I think safety and curiosity alike demand something more of the "Morrison's" cruise than has yet appeared and this is equally due to your readers in China and your readers East of Cape of Good Hope in preference to waiting for official details from America—distant by necessity about one year—I therefore hand you an account of the general results of the "Morrison's" voyage, not so full as I could wish it; but I believe so far as it goes perfectly to be relied on, and if it is not so, it is given to the public in the presence of several persons of the highest character who were parties in the expedition and who can quickly clear up any errors as to facts.

I add to this a curious document (furnished me by an active and intelligent party a British subject) translated from a record at Macao of the results of the last attempt of the Macao government to communicate with Japan.*

The "Morrison's" voyage and this document leads one to ask how long bloodshed and treachery are to be submitted to by the Strong from the weak!!

Your obedient servant,

"NOT A MISSIONARY."

Canton, 1st Oct. 1837.

Unconnected hints of the "Morrison's" voyage to Japan in the months July and August.

The "Morrison" a fine U. S. Ship carried, as passengers her supercargo, an experienced and successful surgical operator who speaks Chinese fluently, and a little Japanese?—a gentleman of the missionary church versed in Chinese: also a Lady of most amiable character and the highest nerve; the wife of one of the passengers. Moreover the declared object of the voyage was to restore some Japanese seamen wrecked on the coast of North America who went in the vessel. The "Morrison" carried no arms of offence of any sort or description; this vessel touched at Corea where she by agreement picked up from H. M. S. "Raleigh" an able Japanese interpreter. At Corea the inhabitants were kind and well disposed, declared themselves subject to Japan.

On crossing to Jeddo, the "Morrison" met with currents of nearly an unprecedented force & strength the "Morrison" approached the estuary of Jeddo in thick weather and, before she neared the land a heavy fire of great guns was kept up either to intimidate or destroy. On nearing however, the shot came to fall so thick as to render a boat (and betwixt the ship and this battery a measure of necessity) going out of reach and view, the vessel anchored for the first night—early next morning, it blowing a heavy gale, they found a battery over night erected commanding them, and with day light firing commenced and they were driven out to a stormy sea attended by a very formidable and effectual fleet of gun boats whose efforts to destroy were only rendered inefficient by the swell of the sea to which the "Morrison" was compelled to resort.

Much disappointed they were not to be balked by one attempt, and a few days after they took into another Estuary and, which turned out to be the Territories of a great Feudal Japanese Prince who has a monopoly of the Corea Trade.—Here they were received at first as brethren; the people flocked round them: an officer of rank took their statement (previously prepared) to the authorities and promised an answer (in 2 days) meanwhile he satisfied himself by examination, that the vessel had no arms more or less; he ordered water which was scarce—he told them they were not safe so far out, and sent them boats to tow them in; next day two shipwrecked Japanese were conveyed on shore in native boats and examined separately before officers of Justice; on which taking place all the written statements promised to be sent to their own court, were returned and the two Japanese sent again on board.

At evening they saw many lights moving along the shore—just at day light a native boat (passing them) warned them in Japanese to be off—day light coming showed a curious constructed moveable battery (the gunners protected at their great guns from horse or musket balls) just abreast of them and prepared to sink them—the tide setting in, and no wind the vessel was carried up the estuary—a Breeze sprung up and in working out she received the fire of heavy guns from both sides the Estuary and the "Morrison's" delivery was a most fortunate event and all speak as to the precision of the Japanese aim.

In this expedition, to leave no excuse, not a religious tract was offered to the visiting natives and in every opportunity readiness to depart if so ordered was intimated.

LAST EMBASSY FROM MACAO TO JAPAN.

Taken from the official records, and first published in the Macaista Imparcial 1836. Translated for the Canton Press.

Don Belchior Carneiro, appointed Bishop of Nice [illegible] and consecrated by this title previous to his proceeding to [illegible] not being able to [illegible] received orders to proceed to China and Japan to exercise the duty of pastor in those churches, then newly erected and separated from the diocese of Malacca. He left India for Macao in 1568. He there exercised his pastoral duties with great zeal; he established the Hospital of San Lazaro for the poor, and the Casa da Misericordia. He died August 18th 1583, and was buried in the middle of the principal chapel in the church of San Paulo, in an excavated grave, covered with a marble slab, bearing on it an epitaph in Latin.

In 1685* twelve Japanese came to Macao in a boat, and related that, while sailing from Tosa to Ise (two ports in Japan) they were driven off in a tempest: they were compelled to this place without having seen any other land, a circumstance which will seem incredible to those acquainted with navigation. They gave the information that the Emperor of Japan was not past his 40th year, that he had but one son who was 15 years of age, and that, though aware that there were Christians yet in his empire, he winked at it and did not trouble himself to enquire after them.

The Captain of this ship was a receiver of the Imperial duties. Indescribable was the joy which the arrival of these strange guests caused throughout the city of Macao; on the part of the laity, as anxious to see re-opened the trade to Japan; and on that of the clergy relative to the hope of assisting in the succour of so many tens of thousands of Christians who were the flower of and example to all the Eastern Church. It got abroad that these Japanese came on purpose, being sent to find out if there were yet Portuguese in the East, either with the view of admitting them to trade and driving away the Dutch or for some hidden purpose of the Emperor as to the restoration of Christianity. This idea arose from the fact that it had never been known that any one had been driven from Japan to Macao by storms; and from the earnest desire of the Captain to go back in a Portuguese vessel, though, at the same time this voyage was prohibited under such severe decrees (and they of inviolable observance) whose penalties would be certainly executed on them and us. But whether come as spies, or actually tempest-driven the city received and treated them with great love and magnificence, and forthwith a vessel was got ready under the command of Captain Manoel de Aguiar Pereira; the fathers of the Company (the Jesuits) supplying one third of the outlay; and for which it was necessary to pawn the church plate; thus raising the money required.

The vessel being ready, the Portuguese and Japanese sailed in the month of June; and it was purposely arranged that no goods of any kind should be put on board, in order that it should not be supposed that the interests of commerce, and not the benevolence of the nation alone, had caused so expensive a consideration. The end did not answer the hope; for when they reached Nangasaki, that ancient seat of the most illustrious martyrdoms, the governor of that part ordered the Portuguese to return to Macao; and never more to undertake a similar voyage.

Notwithstanding the terrors of death, or of the torments, which the Christians in Japan had to endure during the continued persecutions in that empire, the faith went on spreading, and heaven was peopled with souls. And the tyrant Xonguensama, seeing that even these cruelties did not suffice, framed the expedient that there should be no longer missionaries in those Islands; and, in this view, published, as law, the following:

1. Though knowing well that the King has most rigorously prohibited the law of Christ throughout all Japan, yet, in defiance of this, there have still been sent to this kingdom, even to the present time, concealed preachers of his law.

2. The king punishes with death all Christians, who, united among themselves, have invented and plotted wickedness, and things opposed to reason.

3. Yet there has still been sent, from those countries, support for the Priests and Christians yet hidden in Japan.

In as much as what is stated in the above three articles is truth, the king hereby issues a prohibition, and commands that, henceforth, there shall be no more voyages or commerce; and that if, notwithstanding this order, ships are yet sent to Japan, not only shall such ships be destroyed, but also that all persons, coming therein, shall suffer the punishment of death. All which, foregoing, is the order and express command of the king. This 4th day of August 1639. (Here follow 7 names, each followed by the title Cami.)

After this express declaration, in lieu of the faith, the commerce which had been carried on, between Macao and those islands, became broken up; and so, in addition to the utility of navigation, was the greater purpose of introducing missionaries into them, the Senate of the Chamber of Macao, being aware in 1640, of the Edict, by which admission in Japan was forbidden to the Portuguese, resolved to send thither an Embassy. With this view were selected four of the citizens, most noble by birth, dignified by the offices which they held, and respectable by the weight of their years; and to them was entrusted this commission; they prepared themselves with all the propriety which their character required, and, after partaking of the sacraments, set sail from Macao, on the 22d of June, 1640; and, after a voyage of 15 days, reached the harbour of Nangasaki and cast anchor, opposite the "Isle of martyrs." As soon as the vessel had brought up, people were seen coming from the shore, to visit them; and to them information was given that they were from Macao, bringing four Embassadors from that city, to treat with the Emperor touching the trade between it and the Japanese empire. After an examination as to other subjects and taking a list of the Embassadors, for the governor of Nangasaki, the visitors retired.

It was not long before two large craft arrived, bringing officers, called Bunjios, to assure themselves as to the people, and the force of which the expedition consisted; with all which they expressed themselves satisfied; but they unshipped the rudder, and took it on shore. The following day the guns were dismounted and taken away; the Embassadors being told that, on the morrow, they should enter the city, with all their followers.

The Governor wrote to them, in terms of kindness, offering them whatever they might want for the support of themselves and people, and informing them that all relative to the Embassy was to be carried on in writing; this was answered by a grateful acceptance of this [illegible] offer, and their business was forwarded to court. [illegible] the Governor [illegible] by one of his [illegible] [illegible] and being ill received, the answer was the despatch of two Ministers to put them and all their people on trial as criminals. This commenced by questioning them as to how they dared enter Japan, against the law of it's prince, by which all such transgressions were punishable with death? To this it was replied that this law was understood to extend solely to merchants, but not to Embassadors from the city of Macao; that their voyage had for its object a negotiation with the court as to the re-establishment of the trade, between the Japanese and Portuguese. But, unconvinced by reasons, and with a faithlessness seldom seen, the sentence of the Court was intimated to them: by this the Embassadors and all their companions were condemned to die;—the cause of this iniquitous sentence being that the Portuguese had promulgated in Japan the law of the Christians. The Embassadors listened to this sentence, without fear or dread of temporal death; since, through it, they should gain life eternal. The sentence being read, cords were put round their necks, their hands were tied, and, this being done to all the Christians, they were dragged from the judgment hall, in which they then were. The Embassador Louis Pacheco told them boldly that there no where existed a law so inhuman, so opposed to the rights of people, who, among all the nations of the globe, were always held privileged. The Embassador Don Rodrigo Sanches de Paredes [illegible] a firm spirit, sent the following message to the Tono: that people of his character were never treated with such treachery; and declaring that they were put to death for being Christians. The whole of the people of the ship being made prisoners, there were chosen from among them 13 to return to Macao, with the news of that cruel execution.

The night was passed in prayers and petitions to God to aid them with constancy, to enable them to yield up their lives an offering to the Faith which they professed. There were to be seen the negroes comforting their masters, and, strange turn of fortune! the one mingled with the other; joining humbly in prayer, all happy in ecstatum of that happy hour which should open to them the gates of Paradise. The Embassador Rodrigo Sanches not only exhorted them, but persuaded them, with animation, of the glories of martyrdom. The third of August, that day in which Heaven would rank them among the choir of martyrs, and the Church Militant triumph over the perfidy of tyrants, dawned.—When taken out of prison, an exemption from the Emperor, granting life to all of them who would quit the religion of Christ and embrace that of their idols was communicated, in a loud voice. But only one cry was heard, in answer—that all would die in the law of Jesus Christ, embracing all [illegible] thus plainly showing, in these [illegible] voices, the efficacy of divine grace. The Embassador Simao Vaz de Paiva, raising his voice, filled with new energy, and, with sincere joy and happiness, [illegible] to his companions, said: "Now is it! Now is it that our hearts can no more know sorrow, since, for the law of Christ, we die"! To this succeeded an universal [illegible] among them, and a firm hope of victory. [illegible] unconvinced the tyrants again sent to offer life to each one in particular, but, with admirable constancy and heroic resolution, all preferred to [illegible] the ignominious life which would follow their apostacy from the Faith. The Embassador Simao Vaz de Paiva when he was asked if he would change his religion answered, with remarkable energy: "This to me! [illegible] barbarian—do you try to deceive me? Do not you know me? Learn then that I am now going to Jesus Christ, whose glory is awaiting me!" [illegible] among the companions, were also many answers [illegible] worthy of eternal remembrance. Still undeceived, the ministers of cruelty once more offered, as a proclamation, life to those who would leave the faith of Christ; but all, with one voice, confirmed their refusal, to the confusion of the Japanese idolatry. It was past six in the morning when, being brought forth from prison, they were led to the place where the infamous order of the Emperor was to be put in execution. Gonsalo Monteiro de Carvalho, with a protestation of faith, declared the secret of his heart; concluding, in a resolute spirit, that he wished it might be told in Macao that he died for the faith of Christ. The same publicly declared the Embassadors, happy and contented; and, in like manner, did all the rest, animated, through divine grace, with contempt of life, confirm, by their constancy, the great crowd of spectators who followed them. Wonderful to behold was that procession of confessors of Christ—the four Embassadors leading the way, followed by their companions. They reached the appointed place, and there were all beheaded, as a sacrifice to the [illegible] their blessed spirits ascending triumphantly to Heaven; having written, in the book of Eternal Life, [illegible] [illegible] which they knew how to [illegible] that they might follow Jesus Christ.

And that it may be seen that no other motive led the Japanese to fail in the observance of the rights of [illegible] but that it was their hatred of the Christian Religion, alone, we have thought it well to give here the sentence, which condemned them to death, as follows:

SENTENCE.

In as much as have been many and great the faults which have been committed, in the promulgation, in Japan, for many years, of the Christian Law, against the command and strict prohibition of the Emperor; the same Lord last year rigorously forbade the voyage of ships to Japan, adding thereunto, the command that, if, notwithstanding this prohibition, any ship should go to Japan, she should be burnt, and all the people [illegible] condemned to death; acquainting them [illegible] the whole of the above [illegible]—nevertheless, as the ship has been sent,—thus breaking the above law and [illegible] [illegible] and, besides this, as it is said that, henceforth, they shall not send preachers of the Christian law to Japan; yet, of this the letter from the City takes no notice: as the King had forbidden this voyage and [illegible] only on account of this Law (of Christ), and they write no letters on this point, it is a proof that [illegible] all but a pretence, for which all, who came in the ship, should be condemned to death; and not [illegible] allowed to escape, also, that the ship should be burnt, and all the principal people and chiefs be beheaded, together with all their companions. Yet, in order that in Macao and in it's territories, they may have notice of [illegible] there shall be granted to some of the [illegible] and they be ordered [illegible] [illegible] that if, from this time forward, a ship [illegible] to Japan, on any account, it shall be considered [illegible] that, come be what [illegible] [illegible] shall presently be dead men.

This 3d of the 6th moon, in the 17th year of the era Quanay, which corresponds to the 21st of July 1640.

(Signed by the 7 Governors of Tono.)

On the 3rd of August 1640 was, as we have said, executed this sentence, whose iniquity was yet greater as the Embassadors had given in a paper, justifying their journey; and, among other points, were the representations, made by the Governor of Macao to the Prelates of the Religious orders of the city, as also to the Governor of Manila, by whom was sent a noble man as Procurator, to treat on this affair; that as commerce was broken off, he should desist from sending missionaries to Japan; and, of all this negotiation, they had the documents, to show the king; so that they might enjoy immunity, and, in no way, be punished; and so that he should only be able to send them away, without receiving them, or giving them audience; as in the ship nothing contraband was to be found, or even meant for the purposes of commerce. But the Providence of God had destined these happy Embassadors to the palm of martyrdom, which they received. These news were received, in the city of Macao, with the greatest joy. The chapter, with the governor of the Bishopric, sang Te Deum, with the most Serene at [illegible] which all the nobility and a great concourse of people attended; and in all parishes [illegible] did they praise [illegible] [illegible] with salvos of artillery [illegible] [illegible] There was an [illegible] in the city, for twenty days in the houses of the principal citizens, and the relations of the venturous Embassadors, together with music, and other feasts. The [illegible] and citizens, with the governor of the Bishopric, went, in form, to visit, at their houses, the wives and children of the Embassadors, congratulating them on their great good fortune, and offering to take charge of their interests. And, in like manner, went the [illegible] with [illegible] to visit the wives of the other Portuguese, who had died gloriously for their religion. The [illegible] [illegible] the place [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] through a [illegible] of the company, called the "Father of the Christians" [illegible] [illegible] to all, the government of [illegible] [illegible] with judgment.

It seems proper that, from these our writings, should not be left out the names of all the companions of the Embassadors, nor of the countries which gave them birth; that so the inhabitants of the same may have the [illegible] of such adventurous fellow countrymen.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

WALK ROUND THE CITY WALL.

Dear Sir,—As no great actions ought to remain unchronicled and as no truly great and magnanimous man can object to have their actions recorded, and held up to the view of admiring thousands, I will gratify your (no doubt intense) curiosity by giving you an account of the late expedition round the walls of Canton as accomplished by the following high minded and [illegible] individuals viz.—Mr. [illegible] but oh! Mr Editor, a sudden thought strikes me: Perhaps there may be some one of the party who is neither great nor magnanimous, but on the contrary so mean and contemptible, as to object to his name appearing in print, considering the circumstances, as the Governor (not the Superintendent) says I think it better to withdraw all our names rather than offend this [illegible] [illegible] one. To begin—On [illegible] morning at [illegible] o'clock we (mark the word) we assembled at the house of one of the party, who furnished a most [illegible] [illegible] breakfast to all hands, and who, if our names were printed, I had determined should appear at the head of the list in italics (so intense is my gratitude).

We sallied out from the back door of the [illegible] of the hongs at about 10 minutes past six, led by a well known Chinese scholar and proceeded at a quick pace thro' the back streets till we came to the open country, to the evident astonishment of the [illegible] &c. &c. many of whom were heard to deliver the produce of their [illegible] imaginations in the following words, " [illegible] they (the fankwae) are going to worship the graves," meaning the graves of some [illegible] who were buried outside the walls some time, I incline to think, before [illegible] [illegible] Could we not make this an [illegible] for another visit? But not to digress—we got on very well till we came to a flight of [illegible] steps where we were informed by one of the party [illegible] gentlemen were insulted a few days before.

This intelligence seemed to have a [illegible] effect on one of our party who [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] presence of mind of one of the gentlemen who holds

...y surprised, in the hearing of at least twenty ruffians, that if they attacked us, they would get more than half paste. We struck out into the open country, keeping in a line with the walls which in some places presented a most romantic and imposing appearance. One of our party, (a youth deserving of a better fate than imprisonment in Canton,) having perpetrated a book in the gall, boldly attempted to scramble it, and would have succeeded if he had not changed his mind and relinquished the attempt before he got half way up. Nothing particular occurred till we arrived on the archery ground, when, having obtained the good will of the archers by volunteering to practise one who happened to hit no bull's eye just as we arrived, we were admitted to remain unmolested for about half an hour. The native archers certainly performed their evolutions very cleverly. The rider having fixed an arrow, the horse was started by a groom and galloped down the course, the rider shooting his first arrow at a large mat placed at the end, and then taking another from his belt, fixing and discharging that. There were several targets for the archers who deserve great credit for their skill. Having satisfied our curiosity here, we obtained a guide and proceeded to the execution dock (Linkinson ground) where we saw lots of chained natives and shackled men, and one final "lot for a fine state of preservation." The Chinese have a curious legend respecting a tree in this dock. Once upon a time, a boy having criminally boasted that he did at least decapitate a dozen at a time, was ordered to perform the feat, when he evidently trembled and failed and was carried home in a basket. The tree, they say is the mirror of all evil doers and it is dangerous to abuse a person by saying, "I congratulate you on your getting a ride in the basket" (Kung-na-ne-cho-ke.) The place was filled with small earthen stoves put there to dry and was quite odious to the public who used to regard our curious examination of the dead with a rat disgust. We left them and proceeded through a new way home where we arrived safe and sound at half-past eight mutually pleased with each other and all with our trip round the walls of Canton.

Your's truly,

MODESTIA.

THE OPIUM TRADE.

(From the Calcutta Courier, August 15.)

The opium trade meeting at the Board this morning was almost as crowded as an opium sale. Upwards of sixty persons were in the room when Mr. Parker opened the proceedings, and the number room increased more than double, including a large proportion of natives.

Mr Parker commenced by reading the Resolution of Government, which had been laid before a previous meeting, and having briefly stated the object of the meeting, and the assistance given to it by a committee of three gentlemen, Mr. Charles Lyall, Mr. Braine and Mr. de Souza, he suggested that the meeting should appoint a Chairman and proceed to business. Mr. Braine having politely proposed Mr. Lindsay, which nomination was seconded by Mr. Cockerell, on the ground that Mr. Lindsay represented China interest only and must therefore be presumed to have a bias inimical to the straits merchants; he (Mr. Cockerell) would prefer some one unconnected with either, and would therefore propose Mr. N. Alexander. On a show of hands, however, the first nomination was carried.

The Chairman (Mr. Lindsay) called upon Mr. Braine to read the committee's report. In the absence of it was, observed, that the three first sales of the season having averaged nearly the same price, which was about 200 Rs. higher than the fourth sale, they considered the most fair plan of distributing the bonus on opium now in the godowns was to reduce them all to one price. That, for various reasons specified in the report, was quite impracticable, and what opium was wanted in China at any particular date— has the forfeiture of unlicensed opium to be sold and re-sale of it would involve a greater sacrifice to government than the bonus about which it had been asked for— but two schemes had been suggested for their consideration, one providing for a bonus of 30 lakhs altogether, the other for a bonus of 50 lakhs—that of the opium of this season only being shipped for China, it might be assumed that about two chests would remain unsold when the new season's proceedings should arrive, and assuming a further sum of 20 lakhs, it might be given to the shippers of 150 Rs per cent on all in hand on the 1st of January. Previous to the receipt of the Governor General's letter, the committee had come to the resolution of giving a bonus of 150 Rs per chest on all opium remaining in the godowns of the first three sales, and 100 Rs per chest on what remained of the fourth sale; on the June opium, however, it was afterwards been determined to recommend a bonus of 150 Rs. And with respect to the straits, having been ascertained that no opium remained there unsold on the 1st of June, they considered that all shipments to the straits before the 1st May might fairly be exempt from compensation, and that subsequent shipments to the straits and also all consignments to China should be put on the same footing as direct shipments to China from Calcutta.

Mr. Parker then read a letter from Mr. Secretary Prinsep in reply to the merchant's petition; and also the Resolution of Government in his hand, and also a proposed letter to the Court of Directors. He would, observed, that he did not consider himself at liberty to read these, but would state the purport of the former as far as concerned the petitioners. He wished it to be understood that Government recognised no right in them to indulgence of any kind, and had treated the question purely as one affecting the interests of the revenue. That, selecting it to be expedient, in that point of view to make concessions to get the remaining opium of the season cleared off, and that the cheapest way to effect this was by a resolution of price rather than by forced re-sales, the Governor General in Council had resolved to remit a sum equal to about 15 per cent upon the opium in store on the 1st of August, and would have preferred to divide it rateably among the different sales; but as the merchants preferred to have an unequal sum, namely, 200 Rs per chest on the three first sales and 150 on the fourth, he was so would be admitted, subject to the conditions specified in the Resolution of the 9th instant, and entered into by the 15th September, all opium of March by the 15th October, and all of June by the 1st of December. That Government did not recognize any claims for compensation for losses on shipment made, the result of speculation being no concern of Government; but as those who might have opium on hand in China would be injured by the present measures, Government was disposed to grant a further sum of 10 lakhs for distribution among persons so situated. However this not being quite consistent with the principle laid down also government wished the distribution to be made by a graduated scale, giving the largest proportion to the most recent exporters, as these were likely to be the holders most affected by the bonus on future shipments.

The Chairman said that it appeared from what had fallen from Mr. Parker, that of the two questions before the meeting, the bonus of 18 or 20 lakhs, and the compensation to past shippers, the first was definitely settled by the resolution of Government, the second was the only one now open for discussion. The Committee had prepared a scheme, which should be produced. It would however be proper to determine first how the votes should be taken. He presumed no person ought to vote who was not one file interested in the trade—Hereupon a little discussion ensued, in which Mr. Cockerell, Mr Parker and one or two other gentlemen took part, and it was ruled by the Chairman, in concurrence with Mr. Parker, that the right of voting should not be limited to those who had signed the petition, but that all persons interested in the trade as principals or agents might give their opinions.

Mr. Braine then read the Committee's plan which comme ced by showing the impracticability of distinguishing what opium was sold and what was sold to China, and assigned that reason, and also the wishes of the principal shippers, who had been consulted upon the question, for suggesting that an equal sum per chest should be given upon all opium shipped to China before the 1st of August, which sum they conceived the ten lakhs would warrant them in fixing at 150 Rs. per chest; and that the same amount should be refunded on all opium shipped to the straits after the 1st of May, and also on all opium to be shipped from the Straits to China.

Three Resolutions to this effect having been read by Mr. Braine and the Chairman having suggested that they should be put separately, Mr Cockerell said he thought this a hasty mode of proceeding—that the Petition had never been seen to him for signature; that he knew nothing of these resolutions and required time to consider their effect. Mr Braine observed that the petition had been drawn up by himself it was necessary for him to explain that his reason for not seeing it to Mr. Cockerell was, that he considered it useless to give Mr. C having declared it was absurd to ask Government for indemnify people for bad speculations. The following Resolutions were then proposed and carried by large majorities:

Moved by James Stewart, Esq. and seconded by Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esq.

1st Resolution.—That as it is admitted to be impracticable to ascertain what opium shipped to China may be actually on hand, it be proposed to Government to award 150 Rs. per chest to all shipments from January, February and March sales from 1st January to 31st July.

Moved by Mr. Lackersteen and seconded by Mr. Mc. Donald.

2nd Resolution.—That as Government states most distinctly they cannot allow any return to parties who are known to have actually sold their opium abroad as it is known that no re-remittal on hand in the Straits on the 1st June, it is proposed to give all the shippers of January, February and March sales to the Straits 150 Rs per chest on all shipments since 1st May, from parties in those who may have opium on hand on the same footing as the shippers to China.

Moved by Mr. Cragg and seconded by Mr Mackey.—

3rd Resolution.—That as it is possible some of the opium shipped to the Straits may have been transhipped from those places for China, it be proposed that any opium which it may be proved to the satisfaction of the Board has been transhipped prior to the arrival of despatches now to be sent be placed on the same footing as the ship not direct from Calcutta to China, that is, to receive 150 Rs per chest on the January, February and March sales.

That the Government be recommended to reserve Rs. 25,000 to meet said claims.

Protest applicable to the three first Resolutions moved by W. Ferguson, seconded by Mr. Cockerell.

That as it is proposed to give 150 Rs. per chest on all opium shipped to China from the 1st of January to the 31st July, whether sold or not, it is fair and equitable to give the same bonus to what has been shipped to other parts, though sold like a portion of what has been sent to China.

This amendment was moved immediately after the 1st Resolution, but not pressed to a division, Mr Cockerell observing that of course it would have his support at the present meeting. A suggestion from the Chair was therefore also read, that it should be signed as a Protest, and Mr. Parker promised to send it up to Government with the resolutions.

Moved by Mr. Charles Lyall and seconded by Mr. Doe.—

4th Resolution.—That in case the sum of 10 lakhs allotted by Government after reserving a sufficiency to meet the claim referred to in the 3rd Resolution be not adequate to a refund of 150 Rs. per chest for January, February, and March sales, a rateable reduction be made from all.

Mr. Parker here observed that no notice had been given of the graduated scheme recommended by Government; upon which the following Resolution was moved by Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esq. seconded by Mr. Lyall, and carried nem. con.

5th Resolution.—That in consequence of the above resolutions having been carried, it is deemed unnecessary to entertain the graduated scheme.

At the suggestion of Mr. Parker the following resolution was moved by James Stuart, and carried 6th Resolution.—That instead of refunds on account of past shipments being made in money the same shall be given in transferable certificates, which shall be received by the Board in payment for the opium still uncleared from the godowns, according to the amount shewn in each certificate. In the event of a certificate not being brought into the Board in payment for opium by the 30th November next, the Board will discharge the sum specified in such certificate on presentation."

Amendment moved by Mr Dearie and seconded by M. Manuk—and negatived.

"That such purchasers who have no opium now in clear be paid the amount of the refund that may be due to them in cash."

Moved by Mr. Braine, and seconded by Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore—

7th Resolution.—That the return upon opium actually shipped be in all cases made to the shippers under guarantee to settle with the parties beneficially interested.—Nem con.

Moved by Mr. James Stewart, and seconded by Rustomjee Cowasjee, Esq —and carried unanimously

8th Resolution.—That the thanks of this meeting are due to the government for their liberal consideration of the existing state of the opium market.

Thanks were then voted to the Chairman, and the meeting broke up.

OPIUM NOTIFICATION.

The following Rules and Conditions under which Advances will be made with Shippers of Opium, passed at the January, February, March and June sales of 1837 are published for the information of Parties concerned.

2.—Upon Opium of the June sale, shipped in Vessels which left this Port before 1st August, nothing will be paid.

3.—Upon Opium of the Sales of January, February and March, 1837, shipped from this Port to any Port of the Straits or Eastern Archipelago, before the 1st May last, nothing will now be paid, but if it shall be hereafter proved by the production of Bills of Lading and other evidence to the satisfaction of the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, that any part of this Opium has been sent on from Singapore, Malacca, or Penang to Canton, before the 1st June, 1837, then the Shippers thereof as such Port will receive the same amount of Chest, as all other Shippers of Opium of the said sales to Canton, viz. at the rate of 150 Rupees per Chest.

4.—Shippers of Opium of the sales of January, February and March, 1837, to the Settlements of Singapore, on Vessels which left this Port after the 1st May last and before the 1st August last, will receive the same amount per Chest as Shippers to China; One Hundred and Fifty Rupees on each Chest will be paid at three rates of the year 1837, but no payment will be made upon Opium of the June sale as already provided in the 2d of these Conditions.

5.—Payment of the amount per Chest as above allowed, will in every instance be made by the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium to the actual shipper at the Port, or from Singapore, Penang or Malacca, as the case may be.

6.—The Board of Customs will not being satisfied as to a true shipper of any Chest or Chests, will grant an Order on the General Treasury for the amount of Rupees due on the Chest or Chests, a receipt specifying that the Party to receive the amount on behalf of Parties concerned, or Chests. The Order of the Board on the General Treasury may at the option of the holder be cancelled, or paid in satisfaction of any demand or Government.

IT IS FURTHER NOTIFIED

7.—That the Public sale price per Chest of all opium on hand at the ports of 1837 which was declared at the Port after the 31st May last, will be subject to the following Abatements.

On Opium of the January, February and March sales 150 Rupees per Chest will be remitted from the price of each chest.

On opium of the June sale 150 Rupees per Chest will be remitted from the price of such Chest.

8.—On all opium paid for but not shipped between 1st July and the 26th Instant, the amount allowed as abatement as above will be refunded to the Purchasing in this Office, the Pass or order upon the Custom-house-keeper for the delivery of such opium prior to its being returned to such Party the adjustment of the price, and the amount refunded will be notified on the Pass.

9.—On all opium paid for, and shipped between the 1st July and the 26th Instant, the amount allowed as abatement, will be refunded to the shipper and a receipt given as in the 6th Condition.

10.—On opium neither shipped or cleared before the 26th Instant, the amount allowed in abatement will be omitted from the price at the time of payment being made in full, and orders for the delivery of the opium only being taken from this Office.

IT IS FURTHER NOTIFIED.

11.—That the opium of the sale of February, 1837 remaining unpaid for on the 14th September next, will have paid on account of Government on the 1st October, the Deposits being irretrievably forfeited.

12.—That the opium of the sale of March, 1837 remaining unpaid for on the 14th October next, will be paid on Monday, the 16th October. The Deposits being previously forfeited.

13.—That the opium of the sale of June, 1837, remaining unpaid for on the 30th November next, will be paid on the 1st December. The Deposits, being previously forfeited.

By order of the Board of Customs, Salt and Opium, 28th August, 1837.

RUMOURS OF A BURMESE WAR.

RUMOUR is every hour just now in encouraging us to put that the government has serious thoughts of going to war with the Burmese. One man has seen it recorded in black and white that the Governor General is in council, and another has heard it from the highest authority; whilst a third is certain that the 'great capital' arrival of vehicles, ammunition, &c. &c.

...bird declares that the secretaries have been very busily studying the newest maps of the Burmese country and examining the gateway of documents which in any way bear upon the last unfortunate war. "Our office is literally besieged" by enquirers, and the wish, being "father to the thought," every man that wears a red coat is certain that war is inevitable. Well, "we say nothing—but this we will say," that if there is a war, it will be a very good thing for the newspapers, inasmuch that those of the subscribers who are much in arrear should get "a little" the coolard" before they have paid out. It will also be a fine thing for the Harbora's "poor army," and in fact, it will be a very fine thing for us by teaching Horace John and the future—The Dalrette Daily, 1st September 1837.

LATEST FROM SPAIN.

(From the Calcutta Courier, Aug. 31.)

The latest Spanish news received from Gibraltar is of a favourable for the cause of Queen Isabella. A letter of the 6th July, from a well informed Spaniard of the liberal party, mentions that Don Carlos had attacked Catalonia, had succeeded in crossing the Ebro, and was supposed to be marching upon Cornea and thence to Madrid. The court was panic struck, and was deliberating about removing to Badajos or Seville.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

(From the Bengal Harkara Extra.)

June 2. Mr. Duncombe has brought before the house the case of Colonel Bradley and Colonel Arthur, and moved for a committee of inquiry, which was refused by a majority of 47.

June 3.—The Magistrate of Derry have committed the Rev. Mr. Urquhaee a Dissenter, to prison, for maintaining in his discourse the there was no scriptural warrant for making the King head of the church.

In the house of the commons last night, in reply to Mr. Roebuck, Lord Palmerston said, that with regard to the capture of the Vixen, the communication between the governments of Russia and England had ended and the result had been that it was still in consideration of the case, ministers did not think they be justified in making any further demand upon the Russian government. The Irish Poor Law Bill was discussed in committee.

June 5.—On Saturday the store of the city was the scene of great excitement, and numerous failures were freely spoken of, but a stoppage of payment was only definitively announced on the part of three firms, all of them of great respectability and high standing, and supposed not to be mixed up in the difficulties of the times. Messrs. Reid and Grant, Oswegan and Mr. and Messrs. Schmid and Westcott.

June 6. Though the aspect of commercial affairs continues as black as ever, even yesterday passed over more quietly than was expected, only one failure having taken place, that of Messrs. Rakester & Co., and many respected firms having managed to arrange their affairs.

June 10. On the 10th, Lord William Bentinck moved for a select committee to inquire into the practicability of effecting a steam communication with India, viâ Sir J. C. Hobhouse said, that there had been area gone a matter by their vernment respecting steam communication, and if he agreed to the appointment of a committee, it should be on the understanding that it should not interfere with the East India Company's communication, through the Cape with China. Motion agreed to.

The Irish Tithe bill was read a second time in the commons by a majority of 215.

June 15.—In the house of commons yesterday, Mr. Sergeant Spankie having been heard against, and Mr. Wigram in favour of the East India Marine Officer's bill—the question was rejected by a majority of 36. The state of commerce will likely be pretty easily imagined from the report of the wall sale of New south wales wool attempted yesterday; the superior kinds which last year brought 1s 6d to 2s 0d, on the present occasion only realised 1s to 1s. 9d.

June 17.—There has been an extensive fall in Liverpool; the house of Bolton, Ogden & Co. have suspended payment. At an examination at Gloucester on the 12th Messrs. Turnbull and Ludlow passed for the Engineers, Messrs Lyons of Christie for the Artillery, and for the Infantry Messrs. Buckle, Pancraine, Layne Cavenagh, Scott, Cole, Turner, Parrato, Hamilton Shore, Lambert, Bolmeley, Trower, Cunningham, Wilkinson, Kerr, Eaton, Carter, Pare, St. Aubyn, Bedford, Hughes, Wilson, Stone Symons, Macdonald Lovely, Fraser, Munro, Vogle, Sparke, Fitzmaurice, Price, Evans, Fanning and Pollard. The committee of Trade and Navigation sits daily, Lord Ashburton is the chairman.

June 19.—Mr. Justice Maule is about to retire from the bench of the Court of common pleas in Ireland to be succeeded by Mr. Attorney General Wolfe. The earl of Granard died at Paris on the 14th. Another of the ice-bound whalers the Advice has reached Sligo; only five of the original crew of fifty-seven are alive.

June 21.—Immediately on receipt of the melancholy intelligence of his Majesty's decease, the Queen directed circulars to be issued, and a privy council was held at Kensington palace, which was attended by upwards of 150 members of all political descriptions, when orders were given for proclamations of the High and Mighty Princess Alexandrina Victoria, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, &c. &c. &c. to be issued in the name of our late Majesty's, which may be here of his late Majesty's consort Her Majesty then made the following declaration.—"I have very sad still duty to perform which the nation has sustained by the death of her Majesty, my beloved uncle, has devolved upon me the duty of administering the government of this empire. This awful responsibility so imposed upon me so suddenly, and at so early a period of my life, I should feel myself utterly oppressed by the burden were I not sustained by the hope that Divine Providence, which has called me to this work, will give me strength for the performance of it, and that I shall find in the purity of my intentions, and in my love for the public welfare, encouragement and support under every difficulty, and longer experience." (See Supplement.)

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—The stock continues small, but the demand is dull.

COTTON YARN.—Nos 22 @ 36, good quality we hear have been sold at 44 @ 45 $.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES are not so firm as before, but we have heard of no sales. CAMBLETS very dull. LONGELLS without alteration.

STRAITS PRODUCE, remains as before, there being no transactions [illegible] ed, and no further supplies.

RICE.—continues without improvement.

COTTON.—The market was rather inclined to rally in the beginning of the week, but the arrival of the Edinburgh made purchasers less eager, and since then the holders of Bengal cotton have effected sales at considerable reductions on the prices previously demanded—upwards of 2000 bales of Jalone having been sold at [illegible] 8.5. and 8. 8., and 7 @ 800 of middling Bengals at 8. 8., but [illegible] the rise in price reported by the late arrivals, some improvement may take place in the better kinds—but all must depend upon the quantity coming on. Only small sales of Bengal have been made, at very low rates.

OPIUM.—No change has taken place in the measures of the Government, and the only deliveries therefore continue to European vessels outside, which are not so brisk as they were during the last month. Malwa has consequently further declined, and with the accession of cheap Bengal Opium by the [illegible] arrived, and others no doubt close at hand, Patna and Benares cannot be supported at their present rates. The Lintin deliveries to the 8th were, Patna old—, n w 168; Benares, old 2, new 6; Malwa 37: Total 207 chests.

SUPPLIMENT TO CANTON PRESS.

14TH OCTOBER 1837.

"I place my firm reliance upon the wisdom of Parliament, and upon the loyalty and affection of my people. I esteem it also a peculiar advantage that I succeed to a sovereign whose constant regard for the rights and liberties of his subjects and desire to promote the amelioration of the laws and institutions of the country, have rendered his name an object of general attachment and veneration."

"Educated in England, under the tender and enlightened care of a most affectionate mother, I have learned from my infancy to respect and love the constitution of my native country."

"It will be my unceasing study to maintain the reformed religion, as by law established, securing at the same time to all the full enjoyment of religious liberty; and I shall steadily protect the rights, and promote to the utmost of my power the happiness and welfare of all classes of my subjects."

The declaration is said to be from the pen of the Duke of Sussex. Her Majesty having taken and subscribed the usual oath respecting the church of Scotland, the Council broke up."

June 27.—Mr. George Wingrove Cook the counsel has published his opinion that, as Duke of Cumberland, the King of Hanover cannot be restrained from exercising his privilege as a Peer of Parliament, but he declares that by becoming an independent sovereign he is guilty of high treason in withdrawing from his allegiance.

June 28.—The Queen yesterday held a Court at Kensington-palace when the address of the house of commons was delivered, after which the Ambassadors and Ministers from Foreign courts were presented. Her Majesty subsequently knighted the Earl of Durham and invested him with the insignia of a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. It is rumoured that his lordship is to be Lord Chamberlain with a seat in the Cabinet.

STOCK EXCHANGE, FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

(From the Spectator, July 1.)

The scarcity of money has not in any degree diminished; rather indeed, the pressure during the last few days seems to have increased. This state of things is in a great degree attributable to the reluctance which the large discount brokers evince to the transaction of business. It has long been the custom for these capitalists to take large sums on loans from the Bank at low rates of interest, and reap a proportionate advantage from the employment of it by discounting the bills of traders of less known credit, at a higher rate; thus making, in effect a percentage for the guarantee they afforded to the Bank for the safe employment of its capital. The state of commercial affairs is, however, at present such, that more than one large establishment of this nature has determined to restrict itself to the employment of its own capital; and hence its discount customers are forced to seek elsewhere for that accommodation which its extensive agency in the employment of the capital of others has hitherto enabled it to afford them. A great temporary demand it therefore created for money, while this change in the mode of its employment is going on.

The following notice was yesterday issued from the Bank —

"The Governor and Company of the Bank of England do hereby give notice, that the advances in pursuance of their notice, of the 1st instant, on bills of exchange not having more than 95 days to run, will be extended to bills not having more than six months to run; and advances to be repaid on or before 16th July next, will accrue at the rate of five per cent. per annum, and not for sums not less than £1,000.

"Bank of England, 29th June 1837."

A large class of bills—namely, most of those drawn from India and China—are thus rendered available to their holders; and the accommodation which the taxation of the rule, by which no bill which had longer than three months to run was ever discounted, or take as a security by the Bank, must be a material aid to the holders of such paper. It is also expected that the measure now passing through Parliament for the further partial repeal of the Usury laws as far as regards bills of twelve months' date, will afford great assistance to the merchants generally, as henceforward a person holding bills of that date can always be sure of getting them discounted, however scarce money may be at the time; whereas, while an unrestricted rate of discount was only occasionally obtainable upon bills of three months' date, the capitalist of course employed his resources in discounting them at a high rate of interest, and as many could only be obtained on longer dated bills by an evasion of the law.

Consols have been as high as 92¾ for Account; but at that price, some heavy sales occurred; and the quotation is to day ¾ per cent. lower. Very little has however, been doing in either Foreign or English Funds.

The following items of news are gleaned from private letters.

His late Majesty has left by will £4,000 to each of his younger children, and £5,000 to Lord Munster, besides a personal property, which is expected to yield a considerable sum. The King's life is said, to have been insured for £20,000, under a policy taken out when he was Duke of Clarence.

The Company have extended the term of bills drawn against goods in their possession, by arrangement with the agents of proprietors, for six months.

The Bank of England has agreed to re-discount the accepted bills drawn upon the firms of Wigrin and Co., Thos. Wilson and Co. and Geo. Wilson and Co.

Mr. Waghorn's plan for rendering the present Steamers immediately efficient for keeping up the Steam communication between Suez and Bombay, has been adopted. The Hugh Lindsay is to be employed in the Red sea only, and the Atalanta and Bernice in alternate packets from Mocha to Bombay, and two more Steamers are to be sent out.

This arrangement is not to be interfered with by the Parliamentary Committee appointed to report upon the question of a comprehensive plan of communication with other parts of India.

Mr. Wedding gave notice that at the next Court he should move a resolution for discontinuing the East India Company's Agency at Canton. The Chairman stated in reply to some questions put to him, that a correspondence had been concluded between the Court of Directors and His Majesty's Government for the establishment of a monthly communication between this country Alexandria, Suez and Bombay. The Government to bear the expenses to Alexandria and one half the expences incurred between Suez and Bombay, and Government to receive the postage of all letters.

CIRCULAR.

London 3rd June 1837.

Being under the painful necessity of suspending payment, we are anxious to diminish loss and delay as much as possible, and the more so in consequence of the statement which was exhibited to the Bank of England which was as follows, viz.

Bill engagements, but since reduced	£374,700
Private Creditors	33,400
Advanced by the Bank against notes of Debtors	900,000
	£980,100
Assets, after deducting £103,800 for bad debts, and which we deem extravagant	1,392,800
	464,700
Deduct Subscribed fund	200
Our surplus capital will be	£464,700

We trust we shall in time be able to pay every one in full, and we shall therefore propose to our creditors to wind up our concern, under inspection, which we hope will meet your approbation.

(Signed) T. WIGGIN & CO.

From the London Journal 22d February.

Let us now take a glance at the cost of tea, as affected by the Government tax, reserving a more detailed examination of this item for a future time. The bungling attempt made in 1834, to adopt a graduated scale of duties upon tea—and which, although limited to the skies as a most just and equitable scale, charged the tea consumed by the poorer classes with a duty exceeding by 120 per cent. that charged upon the two finest descriptions of tea, or those consumed by the higher classes—has been given up as impract cable and the old system of a specific duty, or one upon quantity, and not upon value, is again restored. Assam, whatever may be their quality, now pay a duty of 2s. 1d. per pound. Now, let us see how this bears upon the several classes of the community. Bohea, which costs from 8½d to 8d. per pound, pays a duty of from 310 to 379 per cent; Congou or Hyson skin, (the tea most commonly used,) which cost from 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 6d. per pound, pay a duty averaging from 130 to 200 per cent; whilst Gunpowder and flowery Pekoe, which sell at from 2s. 8d. to 4s. per pound, are charged with a duty of from 68 to 73 per cent. only. So that, taking the average, the poor pay about twice as much as the middle classes, and nearly eight times as much as the wealthy who sip their flowery Pekoe! There is something so outrageously indecent, as well as flagitiously unjust, in such a system as this, that nothing but a long, coarse in evil legislation, and such a familiarity of the minds of men in power with vicious principle as to have got them so deeply intrenched into their nature that they are unconscious of their existence, could have given birth to it in the "reforming era" of 1836. At the very time when the whole empire was shaken from its centre to its circumference, because the Lords and the Commons differed as to the propriety of allowing the Irish people to enter on the right of cleansing and lighting their own roads, and as to the justice of alienating, at once extent and indefinite period, the paltry sum of 50,000 per year out of the Ecclesiastical funds, to the purposes of national education;—at this very time, this same reformed House of Commons, with the Reforming Government at its head, imposed upon the country a system of duties, affecting one of the most ordinary and necessary articles of human consumption, in the very way we have just pointed out! Verily, JOHN BULL is a fine gentle animal. He can be made to roar out most lustily in favour of some doubtful and contingent advantage, while he must patiently swallow his mash to some immediate and no intolerable yoke.

VALPARAISO 16TH APRIL.

War with Peru. We lament to say that the probability of a speedy termination of this affair mentioned in our last has not been verified and that to all appearances we are as distant from peaceful terms as ever. Our Government has by no means allowed up with the energy of their first measures, and that the expedition against Santa Cruz will not be ready for some weeks, it will be composed of 2000 to 3000 men, and in additiou La Fuente tathes say 1000 men, to discipline recruits he expects to obtain in Peru, to which end he has supplied himself with a large quantity of uniforms &c.; the land and sea forces will be under the orders of Gen. Blanco, who is to subject himself to the advice and counsel of La Fuente: the point of destination I do not transpired (supposed to be the province of Libertad) but if credit may be given to the accounts from Peru and Bolivia, this force is quite insufficient to the object proposed of driving Santa Cruz out of Peru, as it is generally understood that his measures give great satisfaction and that he daily becomes more popular. The friends of our government maintain on the contrary, that the Peruvians are very discontented, and alone wait the expedition to rise against their oppressor, that Gamerra is on the Frontiers of Colombia with a large body of officers waiting to join the Chilenos; that Flores of Guayaquil only requires to hear of their landing in Peru, to declare against Santa Cruz and that Bustos of Buenos Ayres has already declared war against him; to the truth of these statements we can alone give credence, but from the local difficulties of Flores and Bustos we do not see what assistance they can give Chile, though we doubt their line of politics will have a moral prejudice against the cause of Santa Cruz; he is at present on a visit to Yaimca ostensibly for the purpose of arranging some local affairs, but we have reason to think otherwise, and that though to all appearance he bears his actual situation with Chile in the most indifferent manner that, he is actually making every preparation to cope with this country, and that his force will be applied to that end in a quarter least able to resist him.

Again 1st May our correspondent writes. "We regret our inability to state anything favorable; per last vessel from Callao, we learn of three small Peruvian men of war having left that port, with hostile intentions, but their point of destination has not transpired. Preparations for the Chile expedition are now making with great activity, and by expect all to sail in 15 days."

CANTON PRESS,

14th October, 1837.

At length, after having impatiently waited for the June overland mail, a month and a half longer than last year, this has been brought by the Edinburgh from Bombay, and yesterday, a couple of days later, the Red Rover, from Calcutta has put us in possession of news to the 3d July, by that month's overland mail arrived at Bombay. We have not seen any private letters, or English papers, these having no doubt been dispatched from Bombay direct, but we give as many of the interesting news as we find transpired into the Calcutta papers. The most important of these news is the death of King William IV. in his 72d year, the eldest, as to years, of the European monarchs on the throne at the time of his death. Princess Victoria of Kent, has been proclaimed Queen.

The commercial distress, though money was still very scarce for the purposes of trade, (consols being at 92¾ @ ¼) seemed to have nearly reached it's end, and confidence was again reviving; the bank had extended it's discounts to ills at 6 months date, and the East India Company had all used the powers of bills against produce from India and China to renew them for a six months. These measures had tended towards rendering the market for produce firmer, though no improvement in prices, generally, had yet been felt.

The extracts we give as to the reduction agreed to by the Bengal government on purchases of Opium during this year, will no doubt be read with satisfaction by this community. The impossibility of purchasers of Opium clearing it, seems to have led the government to adopt this measure.

We have received a letter signed "Sebastian" on the subject of H. M. Superintendent having appointed Capt. Scott of the Abercrombie Robinson, his delegate, and a kind of Magistrate at Whampoa. We decline, though with some regret, the publishing of it, as not speaking with that temper we deem requisite, but most at the same time were Capt. Scott at Whampoa not to act upon a commission that received from Capt. Elliot, unless they have convinced themselves beforehand, that Capt. Elliot has powers to appoint them; if this should not be the case, they will be amenable to courts of justice in India or England for any restraint they may place the use of H. B. M. subjects under, and may be made to pay much more for it, than the gratification of yielding a momentary power, or of displaying a pedant at their masthead may be worth. In fact we apprehend that unless H. M. Superintendent shall take public what powers they are entrusted with these remain in abeyance. But, independent of the illegality of the appointment, it appears strange to us, and has, we hear, given great umbrage to most of the masters of ships at Whampoa, that just the ship, which had been notoriously in a state of mutiny quelled only by assistance being obtained from Capt. Elliot, should, not 24 hours after, be appointed the flag-ship in Whampoa reach. We understand that this was done because Capt. Scott had been an officer on board a Company's ship, and he pleased he was the senior Captain. We should like to know what the free-trade has to do with the Company's maritime service, or whether, having been employed in it, entitles a man to be placed over his fellow Captains, in spite of his having, 20 hours before, been unable to command his ship, and to be rewarded (for this apparently) by being placed in command of all the others, notwithstanding absence as we know, thereexisting a provision on mutiny.

To our correspondent, "Not a Missionary" we are much obliged for the interesting details he gives of the recent trip to Japan, as well as for the translation of the Portuguese account of the Embassy to that country. This latter is highly characteristic of the times when it was written, and reminds us throughout of the fanaticism and total disregard of truth which characterized many of the speeches of roman Christianity over those the discovery of America.

To "Medusa" we are beholden for his account of the walk round the walls of Canton.

Had we not been curtailed in space, by the news from Europe, we should have, at more length, taken notice of the correspondent of the Moniteur Cantonais, as to the disgraceful seizure of the long rage on the Peiho. As it is, we doubt very much the veracity of that correspondent, who says, in extenuation of the deluge at Macao, that half a pound of tobacco was taken from him at the Custom house of Bombay, which he had kept in a bag filled with old boots and shoes. Not taking into consideration the loss of favor to the tobacco in such neighborhood, what but the wish to conceal, also, contraband, could have induced a person to sniff tobacco into a discharge? Besides, as no British custom-house in India would half a pound of tobacco be taken from the owner, though that tobacco came from Brazil, or the Manilla contraband state.

The following we take from a private letter, dated London, 1st June.

"The tea market remains unaltered "from being inactive" according to the broker's circular. The Company's quarterly sale commences on the 8th inst, consisting of 4,000,000 lbs, and 53,000 packages private trade are advertised to follow. The silk market continues brisk with perhaps a trifling improvement in prices. Twelves may be quoted on 13s 6d to 14s 6d. though a little of very fine quality has sold something higher. Taysams and good quality is selling at from 11s 6d to 12s 6d and 13s has been reached for a little very fine."

Passage boats.—It is some time now that the communication between Macao, the outside ships lying, and Canton has been very irregular, owing in part to the prohibition by the Chinese of the boats anchoring, as before, in front of the Factories, they have since been suffered to anchor somewhere near the French fort, but this being attended with inconvenience to passengers, these mostly preferred going, though at greater expense, by Chinese built hoop boats, and the profits of the passage boats became consequently so much curtailed that one of the owners of them, discontinued to run his large boats for this reason chiefly; but also from an apprehension, that, as other boats similar to his, were accused of smuggling, the safety of his own might be endangered should the Chinese find this out when possibly all the boats might indiscriminately be seized by the Chinese. Mr. Edwards, the owner of these boats, to be relieved of his scruples, applied to the Chamber of Commerce, who stated it as their opinion that, in case of smuggling being detected only the boats guilty of smuggling would be seized, but that if Mr. Edwards would give his guarantee that he would not allow smuggling in his boats, they would use their influence with the Chinese to allow the boats to anchor in front of the Factories as before. Mr. Edwards has now agreed with his colleagues to sign a bond giving security that no smuggling shall be allowed, and promising that on the first of next month he will have in readiness one of five boats to run between this and Macao, which number, it is supposed, will be sufficient to allow of one boat being daily despatched both from Macao and Canton, Sundays excepted.

This being an enterprize on the part of Mr. Edwards which not only promises to be of great use to the public, but requiring also considerable outlay of capital, we sincerely hope that this spirited effort will meet from the public with all the patronage and support it so well deserves, and that as regards letters as passengers the preference will be given to this line of boats, which seldom usually are the receipts for them, over others whose promises are understood to be more manifold.

Canton Literary Examination. This great and truly beneficial institution, by means of which the highest honors and most appetizing offices are rendered attainable to the lowest in the land, closed its labors on Friday last; but at too late an hour for us to notice it in our last paper.

We will not provoke a comparison, which would evidently be so much to our disadvantage, with the Canton Repository by attempting to do what has already been done in so able a manner by that elaborate periodical. We shall content ourselves with merely noticing the result of the present year's examination; and trust that our remarks will not be found misplaced, nor detrop.

The excitement which has prevailed for some time past among the literati of Canton was at its height last Friday when the result of the examination above was made public. At about 31 p. m. the firing of 9 guns announced to thousands of anxious and expectant scholars that their doom was fixed. Loud and frequent were the calls for the printed lists of the successful candidates, and the Gun-fin, Chiefs, were hunted about the premises, as old as high prices, their century to learn their fate, endeavoring, not only the scholars themselves, but their relations and friends. Hundreds of congratulations were made, and happy was the father who entered his name on the list; still more happy that one whose name was not inscribed, who receives the congratulations of hundreds of a admiring friends as they pass by, as if you the new Kew-jin is now a fixed object of their veneration.

On Tuesday the envied seventy-one partook of a splendid banquet, provided for them at the Examiner's rest, at the Foo-tay's Office. To-night the assembled at most month they will all set out for Pekin, where they will undergo another examination, after successful candidates at which obtain the degree of Jin-lin and become eligible to hold office under government.

We have obtained copies of some of the successful essays, translations of which we may probably publish ere long before our readers. At present we shall content ourselves with giving the themes on which said essays were written. They are taken extracts from the "Four Books."

1st. Confucius enquired of his Son Pheyu "Have you yet read the Chuen-tsiu and Chuen-tsiu?"

2nd. Superiors must not examine their inferiors in their inferiors disrespect their superiors.

3rd. First learn to compose your dwelling and then begin to sow your seed?

DIED.

At Bankinquan, Capt. John Bussey of the Bengal Artillery, in which service he has long held a distinguished rank for his zeal and ardour in the discharge of his duties, and the gallantry which he displayed on many occasions, has endeared him to the affections of his brother officers and to the public. In Capt. Bussey, the service has lost a most valuable and brave officer, and the family a kind husband and affectionate parent.

VOL. 3d No. 7. [illegible] CANTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER, 21st, 1837. No. 111.

Ac[illegible] OF THE [illegible] OF THE MIOU-TSE. [illegible]ranslated from "Mémoires concernant les Chinois, par les Missionaires de Pekin"

S[illegible]eng, who meanwhile had approached the Ch[illegible] by a circuitous route attacked their flank as [illegible] were marching upon the town, and broke it [illegible] the passage, but he [illegible] not succeed [illegible] up to 10 days after, during which [illegible] the troops, who had already entered the [illegible] from hunger. After this victory, the [illegible] Emperor the sma[illegible] flag; this in China is a sign that a war is abou[illegible] be ended.

T[illegible] Emperor expected to receive the large flag whic[illegible] taken [illegible] the enemy having been totally destr[illegible]d and the King taken prisoner. He insiste[illegible] again on this, and more strongly than before. Of [illegible] to 12,000 men composing the army of the two Kings at the commencement of the war, hardly 500 remained, and these were shut up in Karai. After [illegible] had held out in this fort about two [illegible] three months, they well saw that the fort must [illegible] taken; a general council was held, where it was [illegible]ed to lay mines, and that they would all p[illegible] under the ruins together with the [illegible]ing [illegible]emy. The queen mother was terrified at this [illegible]lution; she spoke of surrendering at discretion, [illegible]rself, her son the King's brother, and a youn[illegible] princess of about 18 years old. Akwee knowing t[illegible] the Emperor was very desirous to have the whole family in his power, gave them some hope. Surven[illegible] and his General in chief wavered for a long time [illegible]at all their resources being cut off, they at lengt[illegible] followed the Queen-mother's advice. Karai was surrendered, and Akwee became master of the King's person, and of all that remained of the Mioutse [illegible]on. Nothing more fortunate could have happe[illegible] to him; the large red flag was despatched without loss of time, and arrived at Peking at the end of [illegible] of 1776; the Emperor was just returning from his father, Yung-ching's, grave.

An order was given to all the kings, counts, and other grandees of the empire to meet his majesty to congratulate him; we walked immediately after the six famous tribunals. The Emperor passed by, mounted on his large white horse. His prosperity had not changed his mien of kindness and affability, which he knows so well to assume when he likes. Whilst expecting the unfortunate Surveng, who was on his way, the Emperor visited the Province of Shan-tung, where the rebel Kwang-luen had caused so many disorders the year before. Surveng had arrived, and was well entertained. He however once or twice conceived mistrust and [illegible] so afflicted that his health suffered; then the attentions for him were doubled, and he began to flatter himself with better hopes.

The emperor returned from Shan-tung on the 11th J[illegible] 1776; and we had again the good fortune to see him pass about 11 miles from Peking. He did not enter the city. He remained in a kind of park belonging to him, situated about one league south of Peking, measuring eight or ten leagues in circumference. There he remained the 19th. On the 13th, accompanied by all that are great and noble in the empire, he went to meet his victorious general. The fa[illegible] eight sovereigns, dependent on the emperor, [illegible] to have been present but it being impractic[illegible] to give them timely notice, they had to go to [illegible] to congratulate the emperor, where he was [illegible] and exercising his soldiers.

The [illegible]ception of a victorious general in China is one of [illegible] most imposing ceremonies that can be imagined. It is about 90 years since father Amiot gave [illegible]ailed description of it; I shall therefore only [illegible] a few words. To add to the dignity of general [illegible]kwee, on appearing at this ceremony, the emperor had created him count of the empire, and membe[illegible] of the Imperial family; moreover adorned his pe[illegible] with ornaments which only the emperor is allo[illegible] to wear. One month before his arrival the tri[illegible] of ministers had ordered that the roads from [illegible] miles of the spot of his reception should be pre[illegible]d with yellow earth as for the emperor himself. The spot assigned by the tribunal of rites was eig[illegible] leagues from Peking, at a short distance from a [illegible]ntry palace the emperor has built at Wang-[illegible]-chung.

The [illegible]ues to this palace were magnificent [illegible] adorned [illegible] would require a volume to describe the artificia[illegible] fountains, the rivers that had been turned from th[illegible] course, the walks, halls and many building[illegible] which had been erected; we saw here on a large [illegible] what is so much admired in the Wang-cheou [illegible] the Emperor and Empress, that is the celebra[illegible] of the 50th, 60th, 70th and 80th year of their [illegible]

The [illegible]peror appeared in robes of state; he walked [illegible]gh a double row of mandarins as far as the spo[illegible] where the reception was to take place. There, [illegible] collected the princes of the blood royal, the kin[illegible] counts, ministers, and great mandarins, with [illegible] tribunals of the Empire, and a considerable detachment of each of the eight banners. No missi[illegible]ry was present owing to the first ceremony that was to take place.

The General Akwee, at the head of the elite of his victo[illegible] troops, advanced from the other side; as soon as he arrived near the two red pillars, he dismounted from on horseback. The President of the tribunal of rites invited the Emperor to mount a small elevated platform, on the right and left of which were displayed a number of banners and standards; he remained there a moment, the great music of the Empire began, and in an interval of silence, a mandarin of the tribunal of rites cried; "Prostrate yourselves!" Immediately, the Emperor, the General and his officers, the great mandarins, all fell on their knees, and touched the ground ninetimes with their foreheads to adore heaven, and give thanks for the victory.

This over, the master of ceremonies approached the Emperor, and requested him to descend into a large hall, where a throne had been erected for him. Akwee and his officers prostrated themselves before him and touched the ground with their foreheads. The Emperor rose from his seat, and, according to ancient usage, approached the General, and embraced him, which he did with so much feeling that the whole assembly was moved; he then said to Akwee; "Thouart fatigued, come, and repose"; he made him sit down next to him, an unheard of favor in China. The officers were placed in blue tents; tea was served, and 100 eunuchs accompanied by the grand music, sung the chaunt of victory, a species of ancient hymn, now about 40 0 years old. I have heard it said, that a new one had been made for this occasion. The President of the tribunal of rites then rose, and said to the Emperor "[illegible] ended".

The Emperor got into his chair, and went on the same day to Peking to be present at another splendid ceremony; this is called S[illegible]-[illegible]; it consists in receiving the prisoners of war, and in deciding their fate.

On this occasion again all that is noble and great in the empire is assembled. This ceremony takes place in the third Palace court, ending towards the north by the gate called Uh-men. The emperor is on a throne placed in a balcony on a terrace of 25 feet high, and surmounted by a building of about 50 feet high; on the emperor's side are the great officers of the crown; below, the princes, kings, counts, and great mandarins; all along this immense court, along the whole of which the eye cannot reach, are displayed in two parallel lines, from east to west, all the insignia of the empire; banners, standards, pikes, maces, clubs, dragons, instruments, symbolic figures, in immense profusion; the porters are dressed in red silk embroidered with gold; then comes a second line formed by the tribunal; the third is composed of the elephant guards, in war-costume.

TO THE STEAM SUBSCRIBERS AND OTHERS OF THE MADRAS PRESIDENCY.

GENTLEMEN.—At length we have obtained our long looked, for, and anxious object; by this opportunity, despatches came to the India Governments, announcing that Steam Navigation between you and your native homes is to be consummated forthwith; Sir J[illegible] H[illegible]house and Sir James Carnac in connection with your late enlightened Governor General Lord William B[illegible]tinck obtained this boon to India by which benefits and improvements upon a vast and comprehensive scale will be sure to flow in to every interest and to every channel connected with the moral, domestic, commercial and political ties which ought long ago to have been working its course for the national prosperity of our country, in India.

For myself, I am rewarded by having lived to see our object put in motion by our authorities. I hope that ere 3 years are expired, Steam Navigation will go between Suez and all the Ports of India, to the approval of the India Governments and its Communities. The above influential Individuals consulted me on my arrival in England on the 20th April last, what was best to be done, I replied; place the Hugh Lindsey to go between Suez and Mocha, the Atalanta and Berenice between Mocha and Bombay, thereby beginning to do as much as you can with the means you now have in India. Let Maudsley build an iron Tug Steamer of 60 horse power, 80 feet long 20 broad and an iron lat 120 feet long 20 broad for the Nile, both to draw 26 inches water, send all the coals for Suez to me at Alexandria, thereby shewing the people of India and England that you are in earnest; with respect to the comprehensive plan, leave that to be digested by a Committee of the House of Commons; suffice it to say all this has been ordered, and I have been appointed Deputy Agent in Egypt to the Honorable East India Company to do the needful regarding the transport of Coals, &c. &c. &c. The appointment of Agent to the Honorable East India Company in this country has from its commencement been attached to H. M.'s functionary in Egypt and I will endeavour to act for the good of the common object.

At present Madras and Calcutta will be only benefited in their Letters and it will be for Lord Auckland to suggest to the Court of Directors an immediate improvement of my plan, by placing either the Atalanta or Berenice between Calcutta and Mocha, and the other between Bombay and Mocha instead of both from Bombay to Mocha. I was assured at the East India House a day before leaving England that the keel of a large Steamer for the Bengal side would be laid down immediately, and in truth I can assure India that the comprehensive plan will be all they want, its outline to my view is three Steamers of 800 tons each on the Red Sea, 2 going as often as possible between Suez and Mocha, and the other lying in ordinary at [illegible] of a break down in the Red Sea, 6 more Steamers 850 tons each, to be placed between Mocha, Bombay, Trincomalee, Madras and Calcutta. The Depots from England being at the above places and at Socotra. The Admiral in India to manage the whole and assisting it all in his power with his fleet. In due course H. M.'s Government and the East India Company will do as much as above stated.

If there be any weight in my solicitations to the Steam Committees and all other individuals in India, I goes to beg of them not to doubt the plans H. M.'s Government and the Company will systematically carry into operation with the least possible delay.

Having thus given a brief outline of what is now to be done, as well as what will in all probability follow between Suez and India. I now ask your attention to fancy yourselves at Alexandria, when you find Steamers belonging to Governments of England, France, and Austria, &c. going from that Port and there is not one single spot on the Continent that you cannot go to, in those Vessels, my own opinion is, that in peace nothing can be better for you than this and you no longer have to cross the Bay of Biscay on your way to England except by your own choice; the French Government Steamers even carry Horses, Carriages and dogs; all your little luxuries you may bring with you and take with you; your children and bathes will not be any incumbrance on this route, and I plainly state my opinion that all the energies of H. M.'s Government and the East India Company ought to be concentrated on your side altogether, for little appears to me to be wanting. On the other hand, with respect to parcels and valuable merchandise &c. all these and every thing else are sure of getting safe to their destination, through my agency, which I am happy to say is branching off thro' the eminent house of De Lisle in Paris to all the Capital cities of Europe. If my duties will permit me to come to India four months hence I will come, they will take me to Mocha on the receipt of an answer to a letter sent yesterday to the Court of Directors in which I strongly deprecated the Native Agents as utterly useless; I have solicited English Agents to be appointed immediately in their stead with the appellation and power of Vice Consuls, strengthened by Mahomed Ali's positive orders to Governors of each place, to respect and assist them. Mails have been detained even of late at a certain place in the Red Sea, where I have been written to, they were gone, and as I cannot be every where, English Agents are indispensably necessary and they must be appointed. I have [illegible] moreover in my evidence before Lord William Bentinck, Chairman, and to the Steam Committee of the House of Commons, now sitting three days a week, that the Military resident of the Honorable East India Company of Mocha, is also requisite at Mocha, and I have every reason to believe that a Military resident will soon be replaced there, for the double purpose of protecting and aiding the native ships in the Red Sea and also by his presence and authority give considerable weight between Mocha and the Presidencies of India, thus India will have no longer to calculate between Suez and the three Presidencies but only between the Presidencies and Mocha. I see no obstacle, no difficulties whatever, in this selfsame Steam intercourse, the energetic and talented Secretary of the Bengal Steam Committee has only to be with me 3 hours, the information that he and his Committee require is forthcoming. Mails will pass between Alexandria and London in 17 days, sometimes less, while Messengers belonging to the Establishment take the confidential despatches of India in one day less, and this is the system that I perfectly organized during my late trip from London in the capacity of first messenger. These despatches will never have a chance of meeting the eye of any foreign Espionage. This and other matters relative to quarantine on parcels or valuable goods I am also arranging, and Mr. Greenlaw may be assured that I read every thing from his pen in print bearing his name.

Unanimity between the Presidencies of India is now the grand desideratum.—I have been taunted for advocating the Calcutta, then the Madras, and then the Bombay line, in truth, I have done all this according to circumstances, by this I have acted for the general benefit in working and twisting out a part of the object, knowing that if I only could get a part of it to any one Presidency, the whole would follow in time upon the comprehensive principle afterwards. Respecting an English Line, between Alexandria and London, my opinion is, that very few Passengers will ever consent to go 1700 miles extra to England, a portion of which being through the Bay of Biscay, when they can go now to any place on the Continent on their way to London, in all, H. M.'s Steam Vessels from Alexandria to Falmouth are quite useless as to despatch, because we now get letters via Marseilles and Paris in 6 days less than they can do the distance from London.

I invite you all to come by this route, bringing with you whatever you wish, writing and remitting me beforehand with a cover to face the outlay if you want Boats, Servants, Tents, no matter what; doing this is no trouble to me, my establishment increases, and with it improvement progresses also. It is no matter where I am, all this is as well done by my Agents, when I am absent, and every thing can be obtained through me in Cairo from a Bottle of good Hodgson or Elliot, to an Arab Horse with a Lady's side saddle. I hope in 18 months hence that a wheeled machine will convey passengers to the Steamer from Cairo to Suez; in fact, more than this will go on progressively; Invalids are particularly invited; to them Egypt combines economy and a good climate.

Having thus briefly and with all sincerity of explanation that is in my power, detailed to you what is really going on, I can only conclude by assuring you that I will endeavour to keep and cultivate the approbation of each Indian Steam Committee, and indeed every private member of the Indian community; and it is the proudest gratification of my life to have had the honor to receive a plate from twenty of the most influential members of the London East India and China Association to the value of one hundred guineas for what they are pleased to call my "eminent services" in hastening the Steam Communication between England and India, to be assured that, to an active disposition like mine, rewards like these confer more real estimation to my feelings than wealth or title can ever give.

I have the honor to remain,
Gentlemen,
Your truly faithful servant,
JNO. WAGHORN.

CAIRO, 23d July, 1837.

MONEY-MARKET and CITY INTELLIGENCE.

Monday, Evening.

There is a general impression that the accounts from Liverpool are favourable, because they do not state the occurrence of any new failures of note, in consequence of the stoppage of the American houses in London. There has been one explanation of this, however, given to-day, which would alter that impression, which is, that most of the houses within the range of that connexion have already been brought down through these and other involvements of their own with the New York merchants. There can be no doubt that the trade of Liverpool is in a state of paralysis, which renders it much less sensible than it would otherwise be of any new shock from without. From the manufacturing districts the tenour of the accounts is that business is exceedingly crippled, and that the great reduction in the price of the raw material is, from the large stocks on hand, equivalent to a similar amount of bad debt. In most instances the work done is on a reduced scale. There was no want of orders from America, but as the only mode of payment for them was by bills upon the American houses in London, they would not of course be executed until a better state of credit has arisen.

In London no more failures have occurred to-day. Of those mentioned on Saturday, some have turned out to be incorrect, and the present loss and suffering is shown, therefore, to lie, so far as the city is concerned within the range of the securities of the American houses, who, with the Bank, will now make up nearly the sum-total of the London creditors. What the prospect of liquidation is, on the part of those great firms, no man can venture to speak with much certainty, but the accounts exhibited to their creditors show at present a very large surplus after all claims are satisfied. The concerns of these merchants have so much of public interest attached to them, that the estimates presented of their situation will no doubt be generally acceptable. Annexed is a transcript of them, as taken on the 15th of May last, not by the partners themselves, but by inspectors chosen by the Bank, and submitted to the directors as the basis on which further advances were to be made;—

We are also enabled to present the annexed particulars of an inquiry, by the principal creditors, into the affairs of Messrs. T. Wilson and Co.

"At a meeting of the creditors of the firm of Thomas Wilson and Co., held at their counting-house the 5th day of June, 1837.

"Present:—Charles Mills, Esq; John Cockerell, Esq.' Thomas Barow, Esq.; Joshua Bates, Esq.; Christopher Murrieta, Esq.; John Irving, Esq., jun.; Denis Samuel, Esq.; ——Kraentler, Esq; Alexander Gordon, Esq.; A. W Roberts, Esq.; George C. Glyn, Esq; Jones, Loyd, and Co; Samuel Gurney, Esq.; Henry Porcher Esq; William Thompson, Esq; Gideon Colquhoun, Esq.; John Cryder, Esq.

"Joshua Bates, Esq. in the chair.

"The statement of the concerns of the house was laid before the meeting.

"This statement had been fully and carefully investigated by Mr. Bates and committee of the Bank of England, and Mr. Bates stated to the meeting, that in forming this statement the parties had directed their attention to the property of the house in existence and capable to be realized.

"The following resolutions were severally moved and unanimously adopted by the meeting:—

"That it is the opinion of this meeting, it will be for the interest of the creditors that the partners in the firm of Thomas Wilson and Co. should proceed to realize the property as quickly as practicable, and that a payment may be made to the creditors at a very early period.

"That the bill-holders be recommended to present and protest their bills in the usual way, and to send on their protests, and take such steps as will secure their recourse on other parties to the bills, but to retain their bills in this country for the present until time is afforded to see what effect will be produced by the presence of Mr. Melvil Wilson in the United States, and the measures which may be adopted there.

"That from the accounts laid before this meeting, it appears that if time be afforded and proper measures adopted in the liquidation of the concerns of the house, that there is property to meet all claims on the house, and to leave a considerable surplus.

"That, in the opinion of this meeting, the liquidation of the concerns of the house should be confided to the partners, under the inspection of four of the creditors, and that a properdeed be prepared for the signature of the creditors, containing the provisions usually introduced into deeds of a similar nature.

"That John Horsley Palmer, Esq., Joshua Bates, Esq., George Carr Glyn, Esq., and John Cryder, Esq., should be requested to become inspectors, and that in the mean time they undertake that duty and afford their advice and assistance to the partners.

"That a copy of the statement submitted to the meeting, and of these resolutions, be transmitted to the creditors, as far as they are known, and to such parties in the country as are likely to have the means of making the same known to the billholders.

"That this meeting adjourn to the 19th day of June inst., when all parties having claims on the house are earnestly requested to attend. "JOSHUA BATES, Chairman."

Little was done in the English funds to day, but prices have improved, and the market is firmer. In Consols the advance is about ⅛ per cent., the last quotation for the July account being 91. Exchequer bills and India bonds were not in so much demand as on Saturday, and after having been quoted 35s. to 37s., they left off at 34s. to 36s. premium. Bank stock at 204.

The Foreign Stock-market was also rather better the transactions, though not of large amount, being at advanced prices. Spanish Active improved a shade, closing at 21⅛ to 22⅛. Portuguese 5 per Cents. got up ½ per cent., leaving off at 42¾ to 43¼; and 3 per cents., 27¼ to 28¼. Colombian rallied, a little, being done at 21 to ½. Dutch 2½ per cents., 53 to ⅛. United States Bank Bills were at 92¼ to 93¼.

The Share-market was very heavy. Among the day's quotations were Birmingham, 36s. to 38s premium; Greenwich, 6¼ to 6 discount.—Times 6th June

COURT OF JUSTICE IN CHINA.

27th June 1837.

Abstract of a Bill to authorise the establishing a Court or Courts with Criminal and admiralty and Civil Jurisdiction in China.

1. Whereas it is expedient with a view to the preservation of good order among Her Majesty's subjects trading or resorting to the dominions of the Emperor of China, and for the purpose of promoting the amicable intercourse between such subjects of Her Majesty and the subjects of the Emperor of China, and for the prevention of disputes by which such intercourse might be interrupted, that a British Court or Courts be established in the said dominions with the advice and consent of the Queen's most excellent Majesty in the Lords and Commons, in this present Parliament, and that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty by any commission or order in Council under Her Royal Seal. Manual to establish such Court or Courts of Justice within any part of the dominions of the Emperor of China, for the trial of all offences committed by Her Majesty's subjects within the said dominions, and also for the deciding of all civil cases which shall be brought before such Court or Courts on any subject relating to trade or commerce arising within the jurisdiction of such Courts with right of appeal, either to Her Majesty in Council or to any of Her Majesty's Supreme Courts of Justice in the East Indies, as Her Majesty may be pleased by any order in Council to appoint; and it shall be lawful for Her Majesty to appoint a judge or judges and proper officers for such Courts, and to establish forms of proceeding in all matters Criminal and Civil coming under the cognizance of such Courts; and also by any order in Council, either by reference to the provisions of any act now in force for administering justice in the East Indies or otherwise, to make any rules and restrictions concerning the conduct of Her Majesty's subjects being within the jurisdiction of such Courts and concerning the exercise of such jurisdiction, with a view to the enforcing such rules and restrictions; and it shall also be lawful for Her Majesty by any order in Council to authorise the sending out of the jurisdiction of the said Courts, any person who shall be duly convicted of having wilfully violated any of such rules or restrictions; and it shall also be lawful for Her Majesty by any order in Council to impose penalties and imprisonment for any breach of any such rules or restrictions, with reference to any offences triable by such Courts; which penalties and imprisonment shall be enforced in such manner as in the said order in Council shall be specified; and all such orders in Council shall have the full force and effect of laws, in the same manner as if they were enacted in and made part of this act.

2. And whereas cases may arise within the jurisdiction of the said Courts, wherein the interposition of such Courts may be required by the subjects of foreign powers trading to the said dominions, or by the subjects of the Emperor of China, in the determination of differences or disputes between such persons and British subjects. Be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by any order in Council, to make and issue in the same manner as aforesaid directions and regulations for the guidance of such Courts in such cases.

3. Provided always, and be it enacted, that every order in Council issued by the authority of this act shall be published in the London Gazette, and shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, and shall not be binding and effectual until six months after it shall have been so laid before both Houses of Parliament.

4. And whereas by an act passed in the third and fourth year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth's reign intituled "an act to regulate the trade to China and India" authority was given to appoint Superintendants of trade to China: and whereas it is expedient to authorise the appointment of other officers: Be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty by any commission or warrant under Her Royal Sign manual, countersigned by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of state for the time being, to appoint instead of or in addition to superintendents as aforesaid, and for the same purposes, a Consul General, Consul and Vice Consul, or officers not exceeding three in number, under any other designation which Her Majesty may deem expedient, and with such powers and authorities as to Her Majesty may seem meet.

5. And be it further enacted, that all the provisions of the aforesaid act which relate to such superintendents as aforesaid shall be equally applicable to every such Consul General, Consul, Vice Consul or other officers appointed in pursuance of this act; and all acts, matters and things done by any such Consul General, Consul, Vice Consul or other officers, shall be of equal validity and effect as if done by such superintendents as aforesaid.

And be it enacted, that if any suit or action shall be brought against any person for any thing done in pursuance of this act, or in pursuance of any orders or regulations made by virtue thereof, then and in every such case such action or suit shall be commenced or prosecuted within six months after the fact was committed and not afterwards, except when the cause of action shall have arisen in any place not within the jurisdiction of any of Her Majesty's Courts having Civil jurisdiction, and then within six months after the plaintiff or plaintiffs, defendant or defendants, shall have been within the jurisdiction of any such Court; and the same and every such action or suit shall be brought in the country or place where the cause of acting shall have arisen, and not elsewhere, except where the cause of action shall have arisen in any place not within the jurisdiction of any of Her Majesty's Courts having civil jurisdiction; and the defendant or defendants shall be entitled to the like notice, and shall have the like privilege of tendering answers to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or their agent or attorney, as is provided in actions brought against any justice of the peace for acts done in the execution of his office, by an act passed in the twenty fourth year of the reign of King George the second intituled "an act for the rendering justices of the peace more safe in the execution of their office, and for indemnifying constables and others acting in obedience to the warrants," and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action after the defendant or defendants shall have appeared, or if a verdict shall pass against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, or if upon demurrer judgment shall be taken against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall and may recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the recovery thereof as any defendant or defendants hath or have in any cases of law.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Sir.—Quietly ensconced to night, in our ample armchair, enjoying the soothing fragrance of the Manila weed, so favourable to calm contemplation, let us ruminate a while on the past, let us muse for a time on the present; and instead of gazing with grim anticipation on the future, let us rather rear a Chateau en Espagne, though the shadowless vision should vanish next moment, in the smoke of our cigars.

It is your conviction, that my letter to His Honour, the head of the Whampoa magistracy, was not written with the requisite temper. I humbly think, however, that both the spirit and temper which characterized that epistle, were perfectly consonant with the nature of the subject. If men, driven by an inordinate thirst after distinction, and dazzled by the prospect of power, rashly venture forth in the character of public individuals, and undertake duties for which they have evinced themselves unqualified, they must not stand aghast if the issue prove unsuccessful, nor stare with amazement if their pretensions to public honours, are made the subject of scrutiny. When they enter upon a public station, and become, what is called "public characters;" in this capacity they virtually present themselves at the bar of the popular tribunal, and offer themselves to be judged of by the public.

In dealing with a question like the present one, however, some are apt to take alarm at what they think are personalities; their minds lose all power of abstraction; they cannot disentangle the public actions, from the private character, of the individual, whose measures may happen to form the subject of examination; and as constantly as the laws of nature, they associate the two, and fancy that, in the observations made on him in his public capacity, they discover something levelled at him in his private life. I beg to say to such, that their fear is founded on misapprehension. The unfortunate Admiral Byng, and General Whitelocke were I doubt not worthy individuals in domestic life; yet the former was shot for, what was perhaps, an error in judgment, and the latter cashiered, being declared "totally unfit and unworthy to serve his majesty in any military capacity." These men might have adorned well a private station in society, and passed through life unscathed and honoured; but the province they entered was a public one—in that they were to stand or fall in public estimation—; the one fell, and the other passed on in a state of soft, easy, simple disgrace! Yet, in talking of them and their measures, it were preposterous in any one to say we are personal, in discussing their merits as public functionaries. Bearing in mind this principle, my last letter was a true and faithful outline—a brief history of the discordant origin of the Commodoreship, from the rise of the mutiny in the "Abercrombie Robinson," to the hoisting of the Pendant—a kind of sero comedy, comprising in its action, a period of nine days! "Temper," Sir! Never was I in better humour, or higher spirits in my life than during the above mentioned nine "glorious days" that then rolled over our head, gaily filling up with mirthful pleasantry, another brief space in this our mortal journey! and never was mortal temper more placid than ours as when with "grey goose quill" we sat down to chronicle the hardy and daring events of those days. Hoary headed Time, that mighty revealer of secrets, has passed on; and now have we seen confirmed what even the most credulous heart would not have dared to imagine. We have seen Capt. Scott, who could not quell a mutiny in his ship without assistance from others, issuing his orders, as Commodore of the British shipping in Whampoa Reach, by virtue of a kind of Commission he has received to that effect from H. M. Superintendent.

And what led Capt. Elliot to confer this honour on Capt. Scott beyond all other commanders? I leave the conjecture to be solved by others, for I cannot pretend to divine the reason of this preference. The astonishment, in the minds of thinking people at his choice, becomes threefold, when they are told that a mutiny occurred on board of Capt. Scott's ship the Abercrombie Robinson, on Saturday the 23d ultimo which lasted till the following monday, when Capt. Elliot went down, at Capt. Scotts solicitation to still the tumult; and on this transaction followed the installation of Capt. Scott to the magistro-commodoreship! Come, then, Mr. Editor! let us bury the war-hatchet; let us smoke the pipe of peace together, and talk of the puissance of mighty magistrates! I do not stop at present to question the power of H. M. Superintendent, to delegate, either part, or whole of his authority to whom he pleases; I will not wait to enquire why he did not punish the five ringleaders of the mutiny; or, upon what principle he selected Capt. Scott as his representative; but the view I take of the subject is, that it seems not the most politic proceeding in the world to vest a Captain with authority over other ships, who has given such unquestionable evidence of his powerlessness to rule his own.

Turning to Capt. Scott, I would say that, the indecent haste—the feverish eagerness with which he grasped at this shadow of superior power, must have astonished even his most intimate friends; for to see a free trader in a state of dogged, sullen mutiny on one day, and the commodore's pendant officially flying at her masthead a week afterwards, is an event of somewhat rare occurrence. To say the least of it, it was an act of unthinking rashness on his part to undertake the office, thus held out to him, when we consider that the very circumstance of his ship's crew having arrived at that state of mutiny, which he was unable to quell, without external assistance, was that which led the way to his being elevated to, what may ere long prove to be, the very ghost of a Magistro-commodoreship!

I remain,—Dear Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
SEBASTIAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Valour and skill with rare humanity combined,
Proclaim the virtues of a dauntless mind.

Canton October 21d 1837.

Mr. Editor,—On this, the thirty second anniversary of a great and glorious day, when courage and generosity went hand in hand; when humanity was a predominant feature and pervaded the minds of both victor and vanquished, I cannot refrain from offering a tribute to the memory of the illustrious hero whose might to strike, and clemency to spare achieved the victory of Trafalgar and couple this memorial of departed worth with that eulogy which is justly due to the brilliant services of one of his brave companions in arms,—by diffusing through the medium of your journal an anecdote which exhibits a remarkable instance of bravery, coolness, and humanity, and was never published to the world before last April in the U. S. Journal. The escape of the British Frigate Minerve, (Capt. George Cockburn bearing the broad pendant of commodore Nelson) from the pursuit of a Spanish fleet under Admiral Cordova, during the night (February 1797) and the gallantry displayed by the capture of one large frigate, and beating off another in presence of the enemy's fleet, was always considered as one of the most brilliant and masterly frigate actions of that war.

During the chace, and whilst within gunshot of the Spaniards, one of the crew of the Minerve fell overboard!—In such a case it has been declared in discussion, that duty to the country insists that the poor fellow should be abandoned to his fate.—The excellent Cockburn thought otherwise.—Disordered as his ship was by her recent action, having 7 killed, 44 wounded, and 30 taken in his prize the Sabina, which the approach of the Spanish fleet compelled him to abandon, he promptly decided, and the Minerve was instantly put about, exchanged broadsides with the enemy, and succeeded in recovering the man.

Nelson was so delighted with Cockburn's conduct on this passage, that he presented him with a gold hilted sword, expressly made for the occasion, and was partial to relating the story.

The vicissitudes of a Seaman's life, whether in peace or war, call forth one of the most valuable qualifications, presence of mind; to attain so rare a quality, which is inherent with some men, the spirit of emulation and the cherished pride which animates and stimulates the glow of fame and the brilliancy of example, should ever direct a sailors' course, and with heart and soul be taught to repeat Nelson's immortal signal, "ENGLAND EXPECTS EVERY MAN WILL DO HIS DUTY."

I am Mr. Editor,
Your's faithfully,
CHRIS. BIDEN.

CANTON PRESS,

21st October, 1837.

The arrivals during the week from India and the Archipelago have been many, as will be seen from our shipping report. The July overland despatches for China have as yet been but partially received, the Futtay Salam having brought only a few of those letters. The kindness of a friend enables us to lay before our readers the bill, laid before Parliament by Lord Palmerston, on the 27th June, to enable the Queen in Council to appoint "Court or Courts of Justice, with criminal, admiralty, and civil jurisdiction in China." The manner of the appointment and the power to be given, is left to the government, subject to approval of both houses of Parliament. No order in council under this act shall be binding until six months after it's having been laid before both houses of Parliament, and it must likewise be published in the Gazette.

Though for many reasons the establishing of British Courts of law may be desirable, yet we do not see how, without a constabulary or other force at the disposal of the courts, their sentences can be carried into effect against any individual not disposed to submit, nor do we think that many of the British residents here will, without compunction found willing to be sworn in as special constables. The want of physical power therefore is likely, in many instances, to render the decrees of the court nugatory, unless, indeed, the persons about to be appointed to these courts bring out with them a sufficient number of people to serve as a constabulary force. The Chinese, we think, are not likely to interfere with these arrangements, as far as regards civil suits at least; in criminal cases, such as homicide, they would probably not permit the British courts of justice here, to have jurisdiction.

We have likewise been favored, by a friend with a statement of the affairs of the houses of Wilson, Wiggin and Wildes, which shew fair on paper—much must depend upon how affairs turn out in America to render their assets available.

Mr. Waghorn's letter from the Madras Spectator, kindly lent us, will, we think be read with interest, as giving a resumé of what has been, and of what is about to be, done, in the establishment of lines of Steam Packets between Egypt and India.

Our Correspondent "Sebastian" will find his this week's letter in our columns. With all due deference to him, we must be allowed to judge whether communications sent to us, are fit for publication or not, nor does it follow that, he having been in perfect good humour at the time of penning his last letter, that production should have been a proof of this throughout. As to the Magistracy at Whampoa, we hear that there are two aspirants to the magisterial flag among the Country-ships, the one displaying the St George's cross in a white field at his masthead, and the other a red burgee, the till now usual signal of the senior Captain of the Country-ships. The fleet, at the time we allude to, being composed of three ships only, we do not apprehend much mischief to result, should the respective commodores issue contradictory orders.

Minute guns in honor of the memory of the late king were fired at Whampoa on Sunday last by the Lord Auckland, Earl Balcarres, and Fort William, as were likewise salutes in compliment to the accession of the throne of Queen Victoria on Wednesday last.

By the Jumna we have not received any papers from Singapore, no have the letters per Valparaiso, from Philadelphia, 23d June, yet been delivered (Friday night.)

The following notice was yesterday issued from the Bank—

"The Governor and Company of the Bank of England do hereby give notice, that the advances in pursuance of their notice of the 1st instant on bills of exchange not having more than 95 days to run, will be extended to bills not having more than six months to run; such advances to be repaid on or before 15th July next, with interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, and to be for sums not less than 2,000l.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—Long Cloths much as before and although there has been no accession to the stock the demand is languid. COTTON YARN,—Good water twist Nos. 22 a 36 would fetch 44 a 46 $, ordinary, and of lower Nos. about 40 $.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES are not as [illegible] as during last week; LONGELLS, as very few remain in first hands, are in demand at our quotations, but on any considerable importations they may be expected to decline. CAMBLETS are very depressed.

METALS.—The importation of IRON being small, the price is improving. LEAD is rather declining. Of QUICKSILVER there is little or none in the market.

RICE, has still further declined, and there has been a large importation from Java during the week.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—The supply of PEPPER continues moderate, and the price is consequently maintained.

TIN is rather on the decline. BETELNUT would not, for any considerable quantity, maintain our quotation, of 3 $.

COTTON.—We have not heard of a single transaction during the week, the several arrivals from Bombay and Bengal having deterred purchasers from coming forward. As however the supply is short from both Bengal and Madras, good cotton may rally.

OPIUM.—The deliveries are, we believe, going on to a moderate extent outside, but no change has occurred in the measures of the government. Under these circumstances, no certain quotations can be given, and we know that sales of Benares have been made at 600 $, and Malwa at 480, and should the trade continue in its present state much longer, lower rates than these will have to be submitted to. The deliveries at Lintin to the 15th were Patna, old —, new 178,; Benares, old 2, new 6; Malwa 63; Total 249 Chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Under 3000 bales have arrived, and little more can be expected till accounts are sent up of the market having opened, of which there is no appearance at present, as the silk men are still holding out for high prices.

EXCHANGES.—The nominal rate is 4s. 6d. but no bills offering. From 3 a 5000 £ of Sydney Commissaries' bills were sold a few days since a 4s. 4d. The Company's Agents have not yet advertised their rate of advances on shipments.

GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

CANTON, 23rd October, 1837.

"By order of the Committee"

(Signed) WILLIAM SCOTT.—Secretary.

Note—The Values of the different articles must be considered as only a rough approximation to the probable average of the season; it being impossible to attain greater accuracy, owing to the Chamber having been formed at so late a period of the year that before commencing to collect the materials from which the foregoing statement is compiled most of the vessels had taken their departure

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE COMMITTEE OF THE EAST INDIA AND CHINA ASSOCIATION AND THE GOVERNMENT.

Cowpers Court Cornhill 29th June 1837.

The Right Honourable Viscount Palmerston.

My Lord,—The undersigned members of the East India and China Association on behalf of themselves and other merchants trading to the E. I., respectfully represent to your Lordship that it is of the utmost importance to afford to British Interests in China a greater degree of protection than they now possess not only with regard to the Trade at present carried on, but also with the view of extending the commercial intercourse with the Chinese to the manifest advantage of Great Britain and the common good of both countries.

For the purpose of obtaining these objects the association submit to your Lordship the expediency of H. E. Government sending a commercial Agent or Consul to Canton with Municipal and Judicial Functions to protect the Rights and Properties of British Subjects, and by timely notice or otherwise to prevent as far as may be practicable, the infraction of the Chinese laws by British Subjects, such Consul not to have any political authority. At the same time they would recommend that all the former servants of the East India Company should be withdrawn from China as their presence only tends to distract the Chinese authorities in their understanding of the true relations in which the intercourse with that country is now governed, and any duties which the Company's servants might be called upon to perform should be done by the Consul.

Upon the best consideration the association have been able to give to the subject they would not recommend an Embassy to be sent to Canton, but as a further measure they think that an Embassy might be tried direct to Peking, landing at the nearest convenient port; but, as the success of the Embassy would very materially depend upon the secrecy with which preparations are made in this country, it is recommended that the arrangement for such mission may not be known by the Canton authorities previously to its arrival in China.

It would be important also that the negotiator should not be precluded from performing the ceremonies required at the Court of Peking and that he should be attended by such a force, and with such a retinue as would give dignity and strength to the mission, and be accompanied by an Interpreter capable of speaking and writing the language fluently, that by possessing the means of communicating readily with the supreme Government at Peking, without a chance of being misunderstood in conveying to the Court that the objects sought for are altogether pacific and of a commercial nature.

Upon the Embassy being received by the Pekin Government, and when called upon to state its objects the following demands it is thought should be made.

1st. Freedom of Communication with the supreme Government of Peking as a protection equally for British and Chinese interests in case of need.

2nd. Domicile at Canton not only for the individual merchant which is now permitted, but also for his family.

3rd. Permission to British merchants to erect and possess Warehouses for the deposit and security of their Goods,

4th. Permission to trade with Chinese merchants generally as well as with the Hong merchants at Canton.

5th. Direct communication with the authorities at Canton on any local grievance affecting British Trade.

6th. The privilege of trading with Amoy, as formerly, also with Ningpo, and a third port to the Northward near Peking.

7th The occupancy or possession, by negotiation or purchase if necessary, of any Island on the Eastern coast of China where a British Factory may peaceably reside, as free to the laws of its own Government and removed from all collision or disputes with the Chinese subjects or authorities.

The undersigned have submitted the above suggestions in the firm belief that if conceded, they would greatly conduce to the security and extension of British interests as to a friendly intercourse with the Chinese, and they hope H. M. Government will deem them worthy of consideration and adoption, with such modifications as may appear to be desirable for the benefit of both countries.

(Signed) G. G. DE H. LARPENT, Chairman.
" ARUM HASTIE, Dpy. Chairman, and several members of the Committee.

Foreign Office, —May 23d, 1837.

G. G. de H. Larpent, Esq.

Sir,—I am directed by Viscount Palmerston to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, and I am to acquaint you for the information of the Committee of the East India and China association, that the notification of the abolition of the office and salary of Chief Superintendent of British trade in China which is contained in the Canton Register of 3d January last, to which you refer, is authentic and correct.

Lord Palmerston desires me further to state to you that His Majesty's Government are well aware of the great importance of the trade between this country and China, and that they have for that reason cautiously abstained from adopting precipitately and without the fullest consideration, any measures by which that commerce might incur the hazard of interruption.

They concur with the Committee in considering the privileges enumerated in the letter of the association of 23d June 1836, to be such as it would be exceedingly desirable to secure for the interests of British subjects trading to China, but those privileges can be obtained only by a negotiation with the Supreme Government of China, and His Majesty's Government are of opinion that it is not at present advisable to send an Embassy to Peking with a view to such negotiation.

With reference to the suggestion made by the East India and China association, of the expediency of sending a commercial Agent or Consul to Canton, I am directed by Lord Palmerston to observe to you, that the office of Chief Superintendent has been abolished, and the office of 3d Superintendent has been changed into that of a Deputy Superintendent, to act under the orders of the senior Superintendent, or during his occasional absence, and that by these changes in the establishment, the character of the Superintendent, and of his Deputy have been placed more nearly than before, upon the footing of those of a Consul and Vice-Consul.

I am &c.

(Signed) J. BACKHOUSE

THE HONOURABLE THE COURT OF DIRECTORS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

HONOURABLE SIRS,

The Committee of the East India and China association beg leave to state to your Hon. Court that they have received a communication from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce requesting them to endeavour to prevail upon the Hon. Court of Directors, and the board of Control to fix in due time the sums to be raised at home, by drafts on the Indian treasury, and the supplement of remittance by the several presidencies, on the security of shipments; publishing to the community as early a possible such prospective arrangements; that those engaged in trade may take their measures accordingly; add that the tenor of his course may not be disturbed by abrupt interference, generating uncertainty and unnatural excitement: and the Committee, in accordance with the recommendation of the Chair of your Honourable Court, at an interview with which the undersigned were honored, proceed to bring the subject under the consideration of your Hon. Court: because, although they believe there is every disposition on the part of the home government to carry the India trade with it in its arrangements, without any desire to reap a undue benefit by Exchange operations, or having in view any other object than that of securing the punctual receipt in this country of the amount required for the home charges, yet they are of opinion that the mode hitherto adopted has been in many respects, from its uncertainty, inimical to the interest of the trade between India, China, and the United Kingdom.

With this conviction the Committee venture to submit to your Hon. Court the expediency of ascertaining, at the earliest period, the prospective wants of the Company, and of taking measures in advance at home for obtaining funds to meet the same, so as to occasion as little derangement as possible, of the usual course of the trade between the two countries and they believe this object would be attained by the adoption of a plan to the following effect.

Assuming that the financial arrangements of the Company, for raising the £ 3,200,000 advertised for their home charges for 1837, to have been completed, it would be desirable,

1st. That the Hon. Company should in the first week in March next advertise the sum—they propose to raise for 1838, say for illustration, £3,200,000 and continue in each succeeding year to make a similar communication.

2d. That the advertisement should declare that the amount so required should be raised in a specific manner, say for example, (having the precise sums for the further regulation of the Honourable Court.)

£ 2,000,00 to be raised in London by selling bills upon India, the treasury to be opened for the sale of the 1st January.

£ 2,000,000—1838, 4 month ; revious to which the rate of Exchange either to be announced by advertisement, or left to be regulated by tender.

100,000—To be advanced in Bengal on goods hypothecated to Great Britain.

200,000 do. do. Madras do.

300,000 do. do. Bombay do.

£3,400,000, and in the event of the proposed advances on hypothecation not being accepted to the extent specified at any one of the presidencies, the authorities at the others to have the power of extending the amount of their advances so as to complete the remittances required from India for the season.

By this arrangement the mercantile community will be able to judge of the effects of these operations upon the India trade, and should the arrangement have a tendency to militate against any particular interest, the emergency will be met by the timely notice thus given.

With respect to the advances in China, it is the unanimous opinion of the Committee of the East India and China Association that experience has shewn since the opening of the China trade to contrary, it is admitted to the earlier anticipations generally entertained, that the establishment of a Committee of the Hon. Company's Servants at Canton for the purpose of advancing money on the hypothecation of goods, has been disadvantageous to the best interests of the trade between Great Britain and China, and they therefore respectfully request that your Hon. Court will be pleased at the earliest opportunity to transmit directions to Canton that your servants employed upon that duty may be withdrawn and their operations at as early a period as may be practicable.

We have the honor to be &c. &c.

Cowpers Court Cornhill—Feb. 27th 1837.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Mr. Editor.—The schedule of an act of Parliament in your last No. shews the intention of the British Ministry to make some change here, and that as soon as circumstances will admit. I think the easy working of this new Court may be aided by the public attention being called to the discussion of it in advance of any act of Justice—on such difficulties foreseen as to induce a strong remonstrance from the British here against its enforcement; the latter is the event I contemplate as most likely; because I presume this act will be the workmanship of parties who have already proved their utter ignorance of the real state of matters in China. A criminal or admiralty court, well constituted, would I believe, meet with the approbation of every person of consideration in Canton.—A court for the investigation and award of civil rights and property, I have tried to contemplate in action, and, for the life of me, I cannot see how the wheels are to move, and the difficulties, under, are only a few of what such a Court of Justice has to meet.—Suppose two lawyers of undoubted knowledge of the present law in Britain to be got out with clerks &c.—It is a matter of notoriety that no Court of Justice can hold their sitting unless they have the power of protecting themselves—not to mention the Jury and witnesses.—Will any one confident three years in China, say, such a power can exist without Chinese intervention in Canton?—Does such a power exist in Macao?—Or if the Portuguese had the right to delegate such a privilege, has any court the right to expect the attendance of British merchants, as parties in an action, as witnesses and jurors, 85 miles of a tedious and difficult water voyage from their place of business?

Well then—we will say the Court can only be proceeded to in a vessel under the British flag, say at Whampoa.—At Whampoa there are no hotels, no taverns, no means of shelter for parties acting before this court.—Here respectable jurors, led by novelty and curiosity, may attend and do their duty to the Rex—well but do you think it would suit the convenience of heads of houses here to reseat this expensive one a week?—I will allow, for the sake of argument, that these difficulties are overcome, and a case before a protected Court; by which machinery in China is not unwilling attendant on the Court to be compelled to plead from having pleaded, and the judgment against him, how is the Court to carry into force it's award?—Are the tipstaves to descend vi et armis into the treasury of the party against whom the sentence is, or are the Court by application to a Chinese Magistrate to get hold of the person, and deport a debtor to Britain, at the expense of more than £100, when he perhaps, is not worth as much.

The British are perhaps the largest traders here, but a portion of British business passes through the hands of those that are not British subjects; and if any considerable merchant here will look back on the transactions of the week with foreigners not Chinese, he will find that nearly an equal number has taken place with persons not the subjects of Great Britain as with those being British subjects. At present reciprocity and public opinion keep these men of different nations nearly on an equal footing; but if a Court of Law give the one class the power of the coercing the other, without conveying an equal power of coercion, the equality is destroyed, reciprocity ceases, and a British subject, by an act of his own Government, is clearly placed at a disadvantage.

I shall feel obliged if you obviate any of these fears, and at all events by your leading to the discussion of the question.

To the Editor of the Canton Press. Thursday 19th Oct 1837. Whampoa.

Sir,—Having been on board my Ship, since last Saturday, I have only just seen your paper of the 14th Oct. I am averse to Newspaper discussions, and more particularly in a society so united as that of China; but I feel bound to notice the unprovoked attack upon me in the Editorial column of your paper.—I acquit you, Mr. Editor, of any malice, as I suspect you are ignorant of of the real facts, but the tenor in which you state your correspondent "Sebastian" to have written, should have made you pause, before you adopted as your own, remarks which could only have been dictated by pique vanity or party spirit.

It is true, that a man was ordered to be tied up, to receive corporal punishment, and the ship's company reused him; they acted under the delusion (imbibed, I believe, at Whampoa) that the master of a merchant vessel has no right to punish corporally—unless it be expressed in the articles of agreement. An unarmed attempt was made to obtain possession of the man, without effect. The men declared, with one voice, that they would resign the man to any punishment—solitary confinement on bread and water—or any other punishment I liked, except corporal, for that was illegal; they were not listened to: for they who can dictate the extent of their obedience are not the governed. But the question was, how to deal with men acting under such feelings? I know the ready answer, and, at sea, no one could hesitate; but the ship was in harbour, the means of assistance were around about, and I above all a British authority was at Canton. To him I deemed it my duty to apply, to remove from their minds the impression under which they were acting. Capt. Elliot kindly and promptly attended to my request;—he came on board, investigated the circumstances, and emphatically declared the right of every master of a British merchant vessel to punish corporally;—it was one with that of a Captain of a man of war.

After some days Capt. Elliot conferred on me the appointment (which has given, you say, such umbrage) unbought, and un-asked by me; indeed I accepted it with reluctance, but in this plan was so evidently calculated to operate beneficially, that I considered it would be a dereliction of duty, if I allowed personal feeling to interfere with the services required of me. I may at the same time, without much presumption, suggest that I had, perhaps, some pretensions to be selected, as the Senior Commander present of the late E. I. C's. maritime service, which his late majesty honored by publicly recognising as a "service."

As to the the Pains and Penalties, which it seems I may incur, for acting by virtue of the orders of H. M's. Superintendents, I have no great dread, and I am rather amused at the powers being called in question, when exerted with the view of maintaining good order amongst British Shipping in this Port, after the obedience which, I understand was paid to them, under the late Lord Napier, in much more serious matters: for it is yet to be learnt that any part of them are withheld from Capt. Elliot.

In conclusion, allow me to remark, that Capt. Elliot may or may not possess the power of delegating a portion of his authority to control British seamen; but all who know aught of their character, who can feel for their well-doing, or who have interest in it (as who have not in this community?) must earnestly wish that he had it; and, rather than question on to our grounds so desirable an object, would be disposed to wink even at a stretch of authority where more re-prevention was the intention.

If the duty of a Journalist be the public good, and not the indulgence of private malevolence, you have taken a part which to my mind can be justified by no considerations. I am, Sir, Your Obedt. Servant,

ROBT. SCOTT.

P. S. The above having come again into my possession, in consequence of the circumstances stated in the note of the Editor of the Canton Press, I take the opportunity of adding a few words more in explanation of the occurrence on board my ship. When the crew had refused full obedience to my orders, I did not feel, under the existing circumstances, that I could offer to myself an admissible justification, if I resorted to arms. The measure I adopted, as in my judgment suited to the occasion, was to deprive them "of all food" until I had had their entire submission secured. The men asked for their discharges: I told them in the end they should not escape me they might be assured.' We'll for nearly 48 hours, some men were without food, yet no act of violence or insubordination occurred; there was no conduct was reserved, and personnally respectful. I believe now, as I did then, that they thought they were resisting an illegal order, and had resolved to endure the consequences with patient submission. To afford them the opportunity of submission, and to give them a caution, as to any outbreak, to which the pressure of hunger might tempt them, I called the hands out on Sunday morning. To my question of submission, the answer was "It was illegal, they would not submit to it, but any other punishment I pleased." I then told them, the coercion I was using should be kept in force, till I had it, and to beware of any attack on the property of the ship, for I would shoot any man concerned in it. They were piped down, and in my life I never saw a Sunday on board ship passed so quietly and decently.

Five men were sent out of the ship by Capt. Elliot (they were three of them good men till this occured); after a few days had elapsed, on Capt. Elliot's suggestion of their penitence, I consented to receive them aboard. They were brought alongside as prisoners and one by one came on the quarter deck to express their contrition before the crew. The satisfactory conduct of the crew since that time, makes me at least contented with with my own proceedings.

The attack on my professional character, repugnant, I am certain it will be, to every generous mind, has drawn this detail from me, that the public may judge how far it is damaged by this affair: I do not fear their decision: they must admit that I acted with humanity, and I think with a prudence and firmness suited to the occasion of the case: I am of your decision. Generally, the assumption is a gross one, that, because a mistake occurs, it is the result of the inability of the officers; experience does not bear it out.

In the "Canton Press" of yesterday a letter is published from "Sebastian"; he might have been more worthily and usefully employed: to attack private character is a sorry office at the best. The cloak of "public character" is an old expedient, likely to find favour with few; and to endeavor to impede the operation of a measure so needful as Captain Elliot's must meet with the reprobation of all. It is my earnest hope that the commanders of British ships will not look to the Intendant who temporarily holds the flag of office at Whampoa; but to the positive advantage which must accrue from the spirited adoption of Capt. Elliot's measure; all must see the benefit of having an impartial person to refer to in the event of differences, who may put the ignorant right, and sooth irritability of feeling: it's success depends on ourselves, and being for our common good set to an honest with good will to carry it out. In a time like this I should have a successor, and then it will be my desire to show, by strict attention to his regulations, that I have not been actuated solely by selfish considerations. I shall treat with the contempt they deserve the assertions of "Sebastian" as regards my proceedings here. He may write on—may indulge his "furor scribendi," and I hope he will have his proper appreciation, but from me, he will have no notice beyond this. ROBT. SCOTT.

—Canton Register 24th October.

Chinese festivities in Macao. The taste for fancy balls seems to have spread even to the Chinese, who are now spending thousands of dollars in splendid illuminations and superstitious rites in honour of the Bazar Pagoda Samoai Hukan; the feast begins this day, and is to last six days, without caring for the expense, or the danger from fire in the awnings which cover all the principal streets of the bazar. We are however informed that our authorities as well as the Chinese have taken every necessary measure to preserve order, and this is the more called for since immense numbers of Chinese have flocked to the feast from the neighbouring towns and villages. Among the invitation cards we translate the following as curious, and shall in our next relate whatever may have happened worthy of record.

INVITATION CARD.

The banks of the rivers being moistened by the dews, and the autumnal blasts being about to freeze the waters of King. (Macao), whilst numberless flocks of geese direct their light, which resembles a chain of writing wrought in gold, towards Liempau whose mountain tops divide them, we therefore inform the public, that in this our humble town, beginning on the 19th of the 9th moon, until the 23d, libations to the divinity of the earth will be offered in the Hein-cuan (house of council in the Bazar) in testimony of our gratitude. On the 23d and 24th day we shall carry several saints (Idols) in procession. The illuminated squares and streets will make this like a City without night, and the delicious fragrance of the flowers with which the streets will be adorned, will liken them unto a garden in perpetual spring. The harmony of the instruments, and the songs will announce the festivity not only to the sons of Han but also to the strangers, whilst the ornaments and stuffs of gold and silk will invite alike men and women. And although all this cannot be compared to the houses of genii, nor to submarine palaces * yet there will be fairy orchards, where the people will enjoy a splendid spectacle, and amuse themselves, nor shall we be backward in receiving them with that joy and consideration with which Che † was received. We therefore hope our elder brothers will come and honor us with their company. Do not disdain to come.—Translated from the Macaista Imparcial 18th October.

CANTON PRESS,

28th October, 1837.

The Alexander Baring from London 8th, and the John O'Gaunt from Liverpool 9th June, which arrived during the week, are the only arrivals direct from England we have had for some time past. The intelligence they bring has however been anticipated by the July overland mail, which has been received per Bonte Leopen.

We publish a statement of the British Imports and Exports for the year 1836-37, as published by the General Chamber of Commerce. We are informed that a similar statement of the American trade will likewise be ready for publication in a few days.

By a friend we have been favored with the correspondence which, on the subject of the British Consulate here, and the Company's Finance Committee, has taken place between the East India and China Association and the British Government, and India House. It will be observed that the Government seem to look upon the office of Superintendent here as a consulate only, and if such it is intended to be, so long as it's functions are confined to such as are usually discharged by consulates, we shall not quarrel with it, under whatever name the office-bearers may be officially designated. The appeal of the Association to the Court of Directors to do away with the Finance Committee here, we heartily concur in, as does every one else here, we believe. We hope soon to see the answer from Leadenhall Street—may it be favorable! There is one circumstance which we pointed out before, and which may probably incline the Directors to favor the application of the Association, namely, the comparative advantage this year of exchange of direct remittances from India over those made by way of China.

This correspondence as well as the list of Imports and Exports, has cramped our space so much this week that we have been reluctantly obliged to postpone our remarks on the letter of "English" as well as the indemnion of Capt. Chris. Biden's letter, until our next, the subject on which "English" writes is one of paramount importance to the safety of the British trade here, and the subject well deserves to be treated at length—we shall be glad to receive the opinions of our neighbours on this topic, and invite to the discussion of it by means of our columns.

In our columns will be found a letter from Capt. Scott, intended for publication in our last numbe, but which, by an accident in the delivery, did not come to our hands till after the issue of our paper. We have been requested by Capt. Scott to republish this letter from the Canton Register, which, independent of this request, it was our intention to have done, since it proves, on Capt. Scott's own authority, that a mutiny really did exist, and that is was not got under without the assistance of Capt. Elliot. Why Capt. Scott should assume that either we or our correspondent Sebastian should have any malicious motives or personal enmity towards him we do not understand; we stated the circumstance merely as in connexion with his subsequent appointment as Magistrate at Whampoa, which we still consider an inconsiderate one; we did not say nor meant to say, that disobedience of the crew in one instance must lead to an unfavorable opinion being conceived of the abilities of the commander; our notice was called forth by seeing the flag given to a ship, the conduct of whose crew had been disobedient, in preference to other vessels whose good behaviour, would have been an example to the rest of the shipping at Whampoa. As to any personal attack having been made by us on Capt. Scott we disclaim it, in deed as well as in intention; the matter was one of public importance and as such it was our province to take notice of it; our sentiments we express ed in a former number are still unchanged, though if Captains of ships like to act as Magistrates on their own responsibility, they may of course do so.

We have much pleasure in laying before our readers the following correspondence, we received per the Alexander Baring, from which it will be seen that henceforward every single newspaper sent to England from here by private ships will be subject to the moderate postage of 2d., and prices current to the charge of 1d. only.

Cowpers Court Cornhill,
London, 26th May, 1836.

Sir,—The postages of newspapers and prices current from Canton having been commonly charged 1od. and 1s. on reaching London (coming together in an envelope) several representations have been made to H. M. Government, and as the knowledge of their decision may be of some interest to you, if made publicly known, I do myself the pleasure of sending you Copy of an official letter on the subject. The envelopes must be open at the end in future.

I am, Sir, Your obedient servant,
J. STIKEMAN.
Secretary.

Treasury Chamber, 22d May, 1837.

Gentlemen,—The Lords Commissioners of H. M. Treasury having had under their consideration your memorial on the subject of your letters forwarded by private ships from Canton, and also praying some relief upon newspapers and prices current sent from China, I am commanded by their Lordships to acquaint you, that they cannot accede to your request so far as relates to ships letters.‡

With respect to newspapers and prices current, I am to inform you that my lords have been pleased to sanction the charge of Postage of 2d. on each newspaper, the same as newspapers coming from any other foreign country, and on Prices Currents 1d.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. T. BARING.

N. B. OF IMPORTS ALL DUTIES ARE PAID BY THE PURCHASER, AND OF EXPORTS BY THE SELLER BOATHIRE IS PAID BY THE SELLER.

NOTE. Opium can only be delivered at Lintin &c. where also higher prices are obtainable for Camlets, Saltpetre, Ginseng and other Goods, on which the duties at Whampoa are high.—Ships with Rice, Cotton &c. sometimes discharge at Macao or tranship their Cargoes, at Lintin &c. to other Vessels, bound to Whampoa, and thereby avoid Port Charges. The ship rents outside, and River Freights, are various and high.—Small invoices of Wine, Beer, Pickles &c, Confectionary Stationery, Cutlery Crockery ware, &c., for foreigners consumption, are sold at Auction duty paid.

Note. Alum, and Cassia are procurable cheaper at Lintin, Macao, &c; and Raw Silk, Silk piece goods &c., are sometimes shipped thro' the latter Port to avoid double duties, chargeable on those goods, if more than 100 Peculs are required for the ship when at Whampoa.

On French and other Foreign vessels they are slightly varied. Rice laden ships are charged only about $ 1300 in lieu of measurement &c.,

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON GOODS.—Although the expected arrivals bring fewer Longcloths than were expected, the previous high prices cannot be obtained.

COTTON YARN,—is also in less demand, except for very good quality, and suitable numbers.

WOOLLENS.—LONGELLS are firm. The importations being very moderate. SPANISH STRIPES are also enquired for, but without any disposition to give advanced prices. CAMLETS are very depressed, both English and Dutch. We have heard of sales of both as low as our quotations.

RICE,—has remaind tolerably stationary during the week and holders are looking for some litele improvement from the continuance of dry weather.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—TIN has rather declined PEPPER sells at 8½ in small lots. Although the importations of BETELNUT have been heavy, the whole being nearly in one hand, the market has been supported, and sales have been effected at 3.25.

COTTON.—The market has been firmer during the week, particularly for the Bengal kinds, but we have heard of no transactions—holders are asking 2 a 3 moce higher and the alarm caused by the reported large shipments from Liverpool has subsided, since the two ships daily expected (one has arrived) have only about 800 Bales on board.

OPIUM.—There was rather an expectation in the early part of the week, that the smuggling boats would be partially allowed to run, but it has been disappointed, and any measure of the kind appears as remote as ever. Meantime there are several further expeditions fitting out for the coast, but as far as we can ascertain, the deliveries there have been much interfered with of late. The Lintin deliveries to the 22d were. Patna, old ——, new 267; Benares, old 2; new 6; Malwa, 400; Total, 673 chests.

EXPORTS.

TEA.—No transactions are yet to be reported in this article.

RAW SILK.—No transactions have yet taken place, we believe and as prices in England are so very low, nothing is to be done, until prices decline very materially.

EXCHANGES.—On Bengal much inquired after, and Court of Directors at 60 days have been negociated at our quotation. On England, nominal.

GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

CANTON, 2nd October, 1837.

"By order of the Committee"

(Signed) WILLIAM SCOTT.—Secretary.

Note.—The Values of the different articles must be considered as only a rough approximation to the probable average of the season; it being impossible to obtain greater accuracy, owing to the Chamber having been formed at so late a period of the year that before commencing to collect the materials from which the foregoing statement is compiled most of the vessels had taken their departure.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

"Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm,
He needs no indirect, nor lawless course,
To cut off those that have offended him."

Mr. Editor,—The editorial comments, conveyed through the medium of your journal of the 16th inst. touching the control and management of the shipping at Whampoa urge some opinions, inadvertently made no doubt, but calculated to excite erroneous ideas, and render last and hasten that system of discipline and restraint which is absolutely necessary for the welfare and preservation of the merchant service, more especially within the port of Canton, where so many interests, public and private, are at stake. How materially these may be involved through the lawless conduct and ungovernable excesses of seamen requires but little argument to prove.

The appointment of a senior officer, qualified to undertake the arduous station and that responsibility which may devolve on his command, is justified by the experience of the past, and is justly considered as tending to promote good order and afford those prompt and vigorous means which may insure both prevention and cure for evils when are progressive.

As to the question of corporal punishment, I shall ever maintain that, when it is inflicted after due and deliberate enquiry, and is warranted by the enormity of the case, it will be held legal. We have the highest authority in justification of this plea, viz. Lord Lyndhurst, who declared that, if men of war's men dare refuse to obey the lawful commands of the master of a vessel, the master is justified in inflicting such punishment upon him, as may be necessary to restrain such conduct. Baron Gurney upon the same occasion* remarked that nothing can be more dreadful than that seamen should leave England upon a foreign voyage under the impression that it is for them, and not for responsible officers, to decide how the discipline of the ship is to be carried on, and, where a certain portion have engaged in mutinous conduct, that renders it impossible that the duty of the ship can be carried on, that the remainder are to erect themselves in a Court of appeal and determine against their officers, who are acting under the highest authority. Mr. Baron Vaughan and Mr. Baron Bailey most emphatically delivered the same judgment; these great luminaries of British jurisprudence declare their conviction that if the Captain and his officers had conducted themselves with less promptitude, and less resolution, and less firmness than they did on carrying this punishment into execution, submission to their orders, for one day, or for one hour, could not have been expected. On the trial of the mutineers of the H. C. S. Ingles, the late Sir. C. Robinson, who presided so ably over the Admiralty Court, declared that the right and power of Commanders of merchant vessels to inflict corporal punishment was recognised by that Court and the Courts of Westminster, and if such a power did not exist, it would, he boldly thought, be utterly impossible that commerce could be carried on."

In February last, an action was brought by a seaman against Capt. Gribble of the ship Marquis of Camden, to recover damages for having ordered him to be flogged and confined in irons, whilst at Whampoa in January 1836.

Mr. Thesiger and Mr. Channell conducted the plaintiff's case, Sir F. Pollock and Mr. V. Richards the defendant's, before Lord Denman and a special jury. The seaman, named Smith, was guilty of very riotous conduct in the Camden's boat between Canton and Whampoa; he had clandestinely taken spirits in the boat which he refused to give up became intoxicated, and was exceedingly insolent; all this being reported to the first officer on the arrival of the boat alongside the ship, Smith was ordered to be brought on the quarter deck; he refused; the boatswain and other petty officers however succeeded in bringing him up. He became very violent, struck the chief mate, and was guilty of most outrageous conduct. On the following morning the whole affair was communicated to Capt. Gribble, then at Canton, who immediately repaired on board. A Court of inquiry was held forthwith, the charges were proved, and the prisoner was sentenced to receive four dozen lashes. When Smith was brought up for punishment, he was excessively insolent and urged the ship's company to keep their hats on, in defiance of a customary rule and the Captains order, saying with some coarse expression "if you were men you would not stand and see me suffer this." After he had received the full number of lashes, he was put into irons and kept in confinement for ten days.

The plaintiff contended that he had been improperly flogged, and that his conduct had arisen from having taken too much grog.

The defendant alleged that the plaintiff had been guilty of mutinous conduct, and that it was absolutely necessary to inflict punishment upon him, in support of his own authority and the necessary discipline of the ship. Lord Denman left the jury to say whether the conduct of the plaintiff had been mutinous, and such as called for the punishment which had been inflicted upon him.

The jury retired for some time and returned with a verdict for the defendant.

And here, Mr. Editor, I beg to observe that the merchant service of England owes much to Captain Gribble for the spirited manner by which he sustained his own, and his officers authority, at Whampos, and for having so manfully defended so good a cause rather than give way to those endeavours which are too frequently made in England to compromise the principles of obedience by yielding to the base attempts of pettifogging lawyers. The merits of the case are best appreciated when we reflect on the consummate talent of the counsel opposed to Capt. Gribble. The efficacy of the system which governed the conduct and management on board the Marquis of Camden were best told by the high and perfect order which prevailed throughout that ship, and could not have been excelled during the most palmy days which distinguished the order and discipline of the Hon. Company's maritime service

Having thus discussed the legality of inflicting corporal punishment, I will adduce one remarkable proof in support of my assertion that the appointment of a Commodore or a local magistracy at Whampoa may be beneficial to all parties.

In 1832, the ship Barossa, Capt O Wilson, chartered by the Hon. Company from this port to Quichee, arrived in Whampoa reach in a state of open mutiny, which betrayed some disgraceful symptoms during a heavy gale of wind in the China sea.

Immediately after the Barossa came to an anchor the fury of an ungovernable ship's company broke loose; the Captain and officers were assailed with the utmost violence; the Captain with two boys escaped from his own ship in a small boat, then alongside, and proceeded to the H. C. Ship Dunira, Capt. M. Hamilton, the Commodore, who was fortunately on board. Capt. W declared his vessel was taken from him, and was then in the possession of a mutinous crew. The Commodore instantly ordered his 16 oared cutter to be manned and armed, took down the names of the principal mutineers, and accompanied by several officers and a staunch crew, he boarded the Barossa within half an hour from the time the appeal was made.* The Barossa's crew were exceedingly abusive, and when the ringleaders were named and demanded to be given up, some show of resistance was made. The Commodore and his officers drew their swords and dashed in the midst of them, when they surrendered; three of the prisoners were taken and confined in irons on board the Dunira, the other two were put in irons on board the Barossa. The Commodore reported the circumstance to the Select Committee at Canton, who forthwith appointed a Court of Enquiry † Capt. Larkins presided; the prisoners were condemned each to receive five dozen lashes, and the sentence was carried into execution (in the presence of several Company's Officers) on board the Barossa, from which time the crew of that ship became orderly good men, and continued so. The mutinies on board the Sydan, and the Sarah, of a more recent date, were not quelled without bloodshed, but these and other instances are examples of what may occur, and then prove the urgent necessity of having at hand a constituted authority for appeal and redress!

Whilst writing this letter the arrival of the John O'Gaunt is announced, and it is reported that her crew struck work off the Coast of Paiswan, and that the necessary duties of that Vessel devolved on the passengers who cheerfully and zealously kept watch and aided the Captain in the manual labours which a dastardly, skulking, and mutinous ship's Company refused to do. I have enquired into this lamentable affair, and grieve to say the example set by these men is one of the most glaring and infamous on record, as it betrays a total change in the character of seamen, is un-english, and unmanly, and should be most severely denounced and rigorously punished.—The crew of the John O Gaunt were remarkably well treated, were ably commanded, and were guilty of so gross a dereliction of the first principles of a seaman's duty when their ship was on a dangerous coast, and liable to encounter all the dangers of uncertain weather, and a difficult navigation.

In summing up these cases I must make a few observations.

In the first place, I have ever been of opinion that promptitude and firmness of character operate with the surest success whenever it is found necessary to subdue a spirit of insubordination, or to control a ship's company.

When the duty of inflicting corporal punishment becomes emergent, it should be decided upon, and acted upon with vigour, and should be carried into execution at every hazard—for if once a seaman disputes, and successfully resists the lawful commands of his superior, farewell to discipline! it must be a difficult and an arduous task to restore the order and subordination of such a crew; respect and obedience are loosened from their strong hold, and extreme severity may be called into force to recover that position which every Commander should most resolutely, and tenaciously sustain.

I have never known an instance, nor have I even heard of one, where a firm and judicious display of authority has failed in the well timed efforts and just application of those powers, which the well-being of all on board ship imperatively demand should be always ready and available. But I do know instances where ill timed lenity and forbearance have led to discontent, insubordination, and open mutiny.

In spite of the popular theories of the times, I have no hesitation in saying that flogging has preserved discipline, has restored it, and has reclaimed many a mutinous scoundrel who has been led to believe that that mode of punishment is illegal.

In conclusion, we must lament the neglect and supineness of the British government on the all important subject under discussion.

* Lamb v. Burnett, on the motion for a new trial, a verdict having been given for the defendant, who had punished a seaman a on board the H. C. S. Scaleby Castle in China 1829.

† The result of the Court of inquiry proved that a strong degree of discipline led to the mutinous conduct of the Barossa's crew,—the system which governed that ship was censured by the Court, and strongly animadverted upon by the Select Committee; the disaffected men were dispersed of among several of the H. C's Ships.

The Barossa's crew comprized about 60 men.

The total absence of a well defined code of maritime laws is the root of the evil. I have in this statement shown how justice has been obtained, and that the stern principles of discipline have been upheld and supported; but Mr. Editor, the process of common law is slow, uncertain, and expensive, and I have abundant proofs that cases, equally creditable to the firm and resolute bearing evinced by other commanders, have failed and recoiled upon those who did their duty with serious inconvenience and heavy pecuniary loss. This latter calamity is the lot of both sides, a cause gained, is money lost. Nevertheless, a master of a ship had better sacrifice all personal feeling, than yield one inch of his quarter deck to the disaffection of a turbulent crew; let his maxim be justice to all, and discipline pervading all.

I have the honor to be,—Mr. Editor,

Your's faithfully,

CHRIS. BIDEN.

Canton, October 26th 1837.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Mr. Editor.—As the time is approaching when in ordinary seasons the prices of silk and Teas are usually settled, and as I have some interest in the matter (tho' a small one when compared with that of many others) I feel anxious as to the course that will be adopted by purchasers for the English market.

It has been suggested that the late E. I. Company's scale of prices would, under the existing state of things, be considered just; now I think that scale would be any thing but fair or reasonable The Chinese, in the spirit of liberality which characterises them appeal to the generosity of the foreigners (all us we must not squeeze them too hard; but during the excited and feverish state of the market last year, and the year before, they did not spare the screw upon us, and now, that things have changed, we should avail to the fullest extent of our altered position

So far as my experience extends, Chinese have never shewn more anxiety to sell Teas than they now do. We have the staff in our own hands, and if we do not get Teas at low prices it will be our own fault.

I am surprised that the Company's scale should be thought of as a standard now, when our position both here and in the home market is so opposite to that occupied by the Company as possible. The sooner all reference to their mode of doing business is abandoned, I think, the better, without meaning to question the soundness of their policy.

All past experience, I am fully aware, has proved the weakness of combinations among foreigners against the Chinese; yet I should like to see one more effort made to fight the Tea men with their own weapons, and would suggest that a Committee be appointed to settle the prices with the Hong merchants, or that a Committee of the Chamber of Commerce be authorised to do so.

T.

REDUCTION OF DUTY CAUSES AN INCREASE OF REVENUE, BY INCREASING CONSUMPTION, ILLUSTRATED IN THE ARTICLE OF TEA.

This is a position which we have always taken up; and we are doing ourselves justice only when we press into the service of such a position any great corroborating facts as they occur. The last seven years parliamentary returns of the duty received on Tea just published, show this position to be good. We give the returns:—

The following is an account of the amounts received for duty on Tea in the last seven years, from the Parliamentary return:—

1831	£3,[illegible],913	11s. 6d.
1832	£3,809,834	13s. 7d.
1833	£3,444,101	18s. 1d.
1834	£3,591,092	0s. 0d.
1836	£4,708,599	11s. 5d.

A glance at these returns will show their great and gradual increase. In 1830 the duty on Tea was more per lb. than it was in 1836, but so much has the reduction of duty increased consumption, that the total receipts from the duty in 1836 over the receipts of 1830 are 50 per cent: that is, half as much again; and were the duty further reduced the consumption would be further increased, and the revenue further augmented. Low duties, besides increasing consumption, cause all that is consumed to be legitimately obtained. There will be no smuggling without temptation and high duties are that temptation. The latter is pre-eminently the case with Tobacco and Brandy, the duties on which are high, and the smuggling of which is extensive. Let the workings of the reduced duties on Tea pave the way to a serious and sincere consideration on the part of government of a reduction of the duties on Tobacco and Brandy. Not on these only but also on Sugar and Coffee, the duties on which are high. Why should not a reduction of the duties on the commodities we have named be attended with the same effects as those that have accompanied the reduction of the duty on Tea? They are all of them articles of very general consumption, and some of them indeed are of universal consumption. No policy can be more mistaken than that which was formerly acted upon, viz. connecting the prosperity of the revenue with high duties on commodities in general request. This doctrine has been exploded some time, and can never be revived. As advocates of low duties on commodities of the kind now named, we feel confident that we are supporting the revenue and benefiting the people. We may expect the Annual Customs Duties Bill soon, and we hope we shall see the doctrine we are now advocating embodied in the alterations then proposed.—London Mercantile Journal, 30th May 1837.

CANTON PRESS,

4th November, 1837.

In our last we published a letter from a correspondent signed "English" on the subject of the establishment of a British Court of Justice in China. The sentiments of our correspondent are by no means in favor of such an establishment, and they are w. believe, shared by most of his countrymen here. Hitherto the interference by the home-government with China has been productive of much evil, and no good, and we anticipate that the establishment of a Court of law will not have any better result. It appears to us that the aim of the ministry in proposing such a scheme can have been only to put into their gift some new appointments, thereby encreasing their patronage, for we hope that it could never enter their minds to have any but lawyers preside over a court where law or justice are to be administered; a court of law specially appointed to take cognizance of commercial affairs, and presided over by a naval or military man, however otherwise estimable, would never, and very justly, enjoy the confidence of British subjects here. It follows therefore that if the Government persists in establishing a court, a lawyer, and his attendants ought to be sent, and the expenses would be very great, and would probably exceed the cost of the former Superintendents, and benefit the public as much, but not more, than they have done. We do not think that much business would be brought into court; merchants, of whom our community wholly consists are not fond of going to law about a disputed account, arbitration is more generally resorted to, if the parties themselves cannot agree; besides, we have the General Chamber of Commerce, the Committee of which is composed of the most influential members of our community, and we feel very confident that they are perfectly able to decide on commercial points and differences fully as satisfactorily as any judge sent out here. But supposing that a civil cause is brought before the court, is it likely that the defendant will submit to the judgment, if that is against him; has the court the power to enforce it's sentence? Certainly not, for we suppose that the British Government do not intend to send with the judge a set of policemen or constables to ensure respect to his sentence. Besides as our correspondent, already alluded to, says, this community is not composed of British subjects alone—foreigners, not British or Chinese, may in it seek protection against a Briton, and the court is empowered to give it, whilst when a Briton has a claim against such a foreigner, he cannot bring him into court, a position much worse for the Britton whom it ought to be the aim of his government to protect, than for the foreigner. Chinese also, it is contemplated, are to appeal against the British in this court; such appeals or complaints will probably generally be about money-matters; a British subject may be indebted to a Chinese, and supposing the Court to be possessed of physical power, and the Chinese to have proved his claim, a verdict will be given for the complainant, and it's amount the British subject will be forced to pay; but suppose the case, and that is a much more frequent position, to be vice versa, suppose the Chinese indebted to the British subject, what protection can the court afford? will the Chinaman submit to it's jurisdiction where it is not his interest so to do, or can it for a moment be supposed, that either the Imperial or the local government will ever enter into a treaty with the British authorities here, so as to place their own people under the sway of British law. The consequence of the establishment of a Court of Justice would therefore be oppression of those over whom it's influence can possibly extend, whilst for this oppression it can not even afford the slightest protection. It has been said that British law is administered in Turkey, and that there the system worked well, and that it would probably do the same here; but the circumstances are very different; during the time that the British exercised this kind of jurisdiction among themselves their trade with the Levant was a monopoly, similar to that the E. I Company had in China; no British subject could settle in Turkey without the permission of the Levant Company; the Company from it's own funds paid the British Embassy in Constantinople, and the Consuls in Turkey; they had a direct influence over all Britons there, and had physical force to appeal to in case of necessity; besides the Turks do not, like the Chinese, avoid all contact with foreigners, and disputes between Turkish and British subjects are now decided before the Cadi in the presence of a British Consul; and, if the Briton thinks he has been unjustly dealt by, he can, through the representative of his King, appeal against such injustice. All this is denied us here; no appeal can be made, except through those who frequently are the very subjects of complaint; we have no access to Chinese courts of law when we have to complain against any of the sons of Han.

Whilst the Company's monopoly existed it was possible to exercise a jurisdiction as by the then law of England, control was given them over every British subject in China, and they had the physical power to exercise that control, having during half the year some two or three thousand sailors under their orders, who were obliged to obey their commands. But tempora mutantur, all this has ceased to exist.

We copy from the London Mercantile Journal of 30th May, a statement of the amount of duty on Tea collected during the last seven years, from which that Journal deduces that the comparatively lower duties have produced the great increase shown in the amount of duty in 1836. With all due deference we have for that very able paper, appearances have, in this instance, led it into error. We find from the parliamentary returns, that in the year 1830 the Company sold 28,598,822 lbs. of tea, on which a duty of £ 3,217,333 was paid, equal to 2s. 3d per lb. The present duty is 2s. 1d. per lb., the real reduction is therefore only 2d.; so very trifling indeed that it cannot be supposed to have caused any increase of consumption; the cause of that increase is to be found in the cheaper prices at which the free-trade sold their teas; they partly were able, from the greater economy with which their trade is carried on, to sell cheap, and from the competition among themselves, and the heavy importations; whilst the consumption did not grow in the proportion expected, their moderate profits were soon reduced into downright heavy losses the government continuing to receive upon a much lessened value, very nearly the same duty per lb. as during the Company's monopoly, the gains of which were certain and amounted to about 100 per cent upon the capital invested. The great excess in amount of duty collected in 1836 did not arise from a proportionate increase of consumption, but from the forced clearance of an immense quantity of Bohea at the duty of 1s. 6d., very few of which have yet been consumed; they are on the contrary unsaleable in the importers' hands, who in many instances will not receive more than the duty back, losing the whole of the capital and charges invested. Whilst the present system of uniform duty of 2s. 1d. per lb. of tea is continued, it cannot be expected that the consumption will much encrease, and we think satisfactorily to have shown, that if there is any increase at all, it is owing partly to the free-trader not being remunerated for his enterprize, but chiefly to his actual losses, for which he has to thank a Government which had promised far different treatment to the free-trader than what he has experienced.

The remarks of our Correspondent "T." are well worth attention. The shipping season, though hitherto every one has refrained from going into the market, must very soon commence, and it will greatly depend on the firmness of exporters whether the prices of this season for teas and silk will be such as promise remuneration to the speculator, or otherwise. The Chinese, whose profits, by means of the H. C advances, have been very great during the two last seasons, hope to see these befriend them again this year; in a great measure they will not be disappointed, but, though nothing has yet been officially announced on the subject, it is generally supposed that a different plan of apportioning these advances will be acted upon this year by the Agents of the Finance Committee. We hear it said that advances will be granted on shipments, on these being ready, and application for the money being made to the Agents, without again resorting to the former mode of allowing each applicant before hand to state what will be the extent of his probable wants, and without fixing a period until when such advances will be granted, a mode of proceeding which last year transferred hundreds of thousands of dollars from the pockets of the tea and silk exporters into those of the Chinese. These remarks of ours have however no much better foundation than hearsay, and the improbability that the same ruinous system can possibly again be resorted to. Were it however not for these advances, it is probable that the Chinese would very soon be found willing to lower their demands; they would press forward to tempt the comparatively few buyers that would then be in the market, by low prices, nor would they have the rallying point the advances now afford them. The East India and China Association, which at first injudiciously supported the Finance Committee here, have also now, shut the mischief is done, found out their error, and represented to the India house, the propriety of withdrawing that establishment; may these representations pressed from here, as well as in England, soon have the desired effect!

The proposal which "T" makes of appointing a Committee either of the Chamber of Commerce, or of merchants generally, independent of the Chamber, might certainly produce good, if the community could at all be brought to adhere to the resolutions of such committee, but fixing the prices of teas for the season could only be done by the Company, who, being alone in the market, had not to contend with competition. Now we apprehend, the teas will always go to the best bidder, and it is the discretion of the purchaser alone which must decide the market price Fixing prices therefore is following the plan adopted by the Company, but circumstances having changed altogether, this can no longer be effectually done, and bona fide sales are, in our humble opinion, the only criterion by which contracts at market price can be regulated. To have recourse, for this purpose, for to such contracts, we presume, our correspondent alludes, to the old Company's prices, would, we think, not answer under present circumstances.

We have received "Sebastian's" very able letter, but before publishing it, we must request him to give us his address, as he cannot expect us, without knowing who he is, to publish flat contradictions to statements made under the responsibility of a name.

Capt. Biden's letter will, we believe, be read with interest. So very many cases of disobedience and mutiny have lately occurred in the shipping to this port, that it well deserves the serious consideration of those interested in shipping, and that some plan to obviate this evil be devised. The present maritime laws seem to be deficient, and not only property, but the lives of an immense number of people, depend upon the good conduct of Ship's companies.

We hear that another Imperial Edict has been received, in which the departure of the Gentlemen with some changes in names, who were ordered to leave China some time ago, is again insisted on. The Emperor in the same document, we are told, reproaches the Vice-roy for sharing in the profits of the Opium-trade, and also the lower mandarins for connivance at the escape of smugglers. A scene is said lately to have happened between the Vice-roy and Hoppo. The former namely, on the latter's paying him a visit, gravely reproached him for venality in sharing in the profits of the Opium-trade, when the Hoppo, who had but just made a seizure of an Opium boat, retaliated, by shewing the Vice-roy's passport under which that boat sailed. The Vice-roy's reproaches immediately, it is said, changed into supplications for secrecy. We give the story as we heard it; we do not vouch for it's truth, but the thing is very possible.

A fire broke out in the suburbs on Thursday night, about a mile to the north of the Factories. It was soon got under, having destroyed only two small dwelling houses.

GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF THE CANTON GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, TO WHICH ARE NOW JOINED THE DECISIONS OF THE COMMITTEE, AS APPROVED BY A PUBLIC MEETING OF THE GENERAL CHAMBER ON SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4TH, 1837.

REPORT.

The Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce previously to the cessation of their functions have the pleasure of submitting to the members the opinions they have arrived at on various points of General interest which have from time to time been referred to them, and which unless otherwise determined at the General meeting to be held on Saturday the 4th November, they propose shall be considered as constituting the established usage of the port.

The Committee have not sought officiously to advance opinions unless applied to, under an impression that it is inexpedient to raise discussion on points regarding which no doubt is expressed, and that a General Code of Regulations for the business of the Port, can be best laid down from the slow growth of practice, as developed in the decisions of the Chamber, on such questions as may be from time to time submitted.

The Committee have in like manner abstained from attempting to redress grievances in cases where their aid has not been specially requested, from a conviction that under the peculiar circumstances in which Foreigners are placed in this country much evil is apt to ensue from such attempts, when unattended with success, and the greatest caution is necessary to avoid diminishing by a display of failure, the influence (however inconsiderable) which they possess.

The Compilation of the Year's Trade Statements will probably be considered as the most useful of the Committee's labours, and these they regret will be found more imperfect than could be desired owing to the Chamber having been formed at so late a period that most of the shipping of the Season had taken their departure, before the Secretary entered on the functions of his office, from which cause the difficulties of the task were greatly increased.—But from the total want of official sources, the work must under any circumstances be one of difficulty and uncertainty requiring not only the greatest forbearance, but the cordial co-operation of all classes of the Commercial Community, and on this head the Committee have pleasure in recording their grateful sense of the willing and able assistance which the Secretary has uniformly received.—The Committee hope they are not too sanguine in anticipating greater accuracy as well as promptness in the publication of these reports in future years.

The obtaining of additional Factory Room was one of the earliest subjects recommended to the Committee's consideration, but having ascertained that not the smallest chance existed of its being granted at present, it was deemed better a little longer to forbear making application to Government.

The Committee's representation of the unsightly state of the space in front of the factories was well received by the senior Hong merchant, who stated that scavengers were constantly employed by the Cohong in keeping the Square clean, and that two boats were always in attendance for the removal of dirt. The Committee believe that the vigilant attention of the Foreign Inhabitants in noticing any neglect of duty that may occur on the part of those scavengers and of their own coolies, is all that is now necessary to prevent recurring nuisances.—The Cohong made an effort to remove the idle natives who occasionally crowd and obstruct this space, but were compelled to desist in consequence of a popular tumult, which had resulted from their interference, nearly attended with loss of life—the Chinese populace conceiving they have as good a right as Foreigners to frequent the spot.

In consequence of a general wish that Canton should not be without a public time keeper, and the only one it contained having belonged to the East India Company, by whom it was lately ordered to be sold, the Committee was requested by the Foreign community to arrange for its purchase, which was effected for the sum of a thousand Dollars on the authority of a professional valuation. The clock tower however having been in such a state of decay as to require renewal, and the space it occupied being required by the new tenants of the premises it became necessary to erect it elsewhere which required the expenditure of about a thousand Dollars more, and both sums have yet to be recovered from the subscribers. The Committee regret it was not in their power to obtain a more exposed site, or to give the Tower a greater elevation which the nature of the ground would not, but with very doubtful safety, have admitted of, besides being fearful the work might have been interfered with and stopped from the superstitious prejudices of the Chinese, had it been exposed to their observation.

Various causes have prevented the completion of satisfactory arrangements for the establishing of a Post office The Committee have given unremitted attention to the subject, and are now in hope that the arrangements and negotiations in progress, will shortly enable Capt. Elliot who has undertaken its management, to carry the wishes of the Community into the fullest effect—while the same measures will restore to the Macao passage boats that regularity, of which the want has been lately so much evidently felt.

The Committee have placed themselves in correspondence with the Chambers of Commerce established at Bombay, Bengal and Singapore, from each of whom they have received the most friendly assurances of co operation. At the request of the Bombay Chamber an enquiry has been instituted, as to the best mode of obviating the great inconvenience and losses those engaged in the Malwa Opium Trade sustain from, as they seem to suppose, a different general appreciation of the quality of the Drug here by the Chinese from that of the inspectors at Bombay The report has hitherto been delayed from the great attention the importance of the subject required but in the meantime musters have been prepared and it is hoped that these and the information and suggestions to accompany them cannot but prove of material advantage.—In the enquiry the Committee have to acknowledge much valuable assistance from the practical experience of Captains Macondray and Parry which they most ably detailed.

Canton, October 30th, 1837.

The following are the opinions of the Committee on the various subjects to which they refer.

DETENTION OF VESSELS AT LINTIN.

THE Committee of the Canton General Chamber of Commerce, having been applied to, for their opinion as to the period, for which inward bound Vessels may be justified in remaining at Lintin, to transship Cargo where no provision has been made for such an occurrence. The following is the result of their deliberations.

1st. That all Vessels bound for Whampoa may remain fifteen days outside of the Bogue, Tigris, for the purpose of receiving or delivering cargo, when there is no stipulation to the contrary, but any delay in proceeding to Whampoa after that period has expired, should subject the Vessel to all penalties, to which she would be liable elsewhere, for undue detention of goods.

2d. That Vessels bound to Lintin under agreement to unload there, may be required to retain their Cargoes, on board, or pay for their being kept in a Lintin receiving vessel, for fifteen days after the consignees letters reach Canton; at the end of which period it should be incumbent on the consignees to receive them from on board.

RESPECTING THE SETTLEMENT OF DUTIES.

In consequence of numerous complaints lately brought under the notice of the Chamber of Commerce of the vexatious detention of ships, in not obtaining the grand Chop caused by the non payment of duties on goods imported in them, the Committee has resolved earnestly to recommend to the General body of Foreign Merchants of Canton to ascertain on or shortly after the landing of goods to their consignment the rate of duty that is to be levied thereon. And for the purpose of preventing as far as may be practicable the levying of an excessive or extortionate duty, the Committee would further recommend that an efficient person from each consignee should always be present at the examination and measurement of goods by the mandarins, as well as that the attendance of the Hong-merchant's purser should be procured.—And finally, if not withstanding these precautions, the mandarins should nevertheless, persist in demanding an unreasonable rate of duty, the Committee recommend, that complaint thereof should be forthwith sent to them, and they will use their endeavours to obtain redress in such manner as shall appear to them best calculated to obtain that end, it being distinctly understood that the object sought to be attained by such interference of the Committee, between Foreign merchants and the Chinese Government, is that of preventing as far as possible the detention of vessels when ready for sea for want of the Grand Chop.

LIABILITY OF SHIP MASTERS TO DISCHARGE OR RECEIVE CARGO ON SUNDAY

In reply to an enquiry, whether Commanders of Ships were bound to deliver or receive cargo on Sunday, the Committee were unanimously of opinion that they would be justified in refusing to do so.

RESPECTING HOMICIDE.

An enquiry having been made as to whether it is the duty of Commanders of vessels at Whampoa to detain in custody any of their crews who may unfortunately become implicated in a case of Chinese homicide.—A conversation ensued in which it appeared to be the sense of the Committee, that it belongs exclusively to the Chinese Government to vindicate the authority of its own laws, by apprehending those who may be accused of violating them, and without undeniable proof of wilful murder justly involving the extreme penalty of the law, it would be inexpedient for the Commander of a vessel, to detain the accused party; since it would be affording facilities to the Chinese, to enforce their barbarous and unjust demand of life, however much palliating circumstances may have occurred to modify the nature of the crime.

PAYMENT OF PORT CHARGES BY CHARTERED VESSELS.

The opinion of the Committee was requested "In the case of a chartered ship, where the owners are bound to victual and man the same, but the charterers to pay all port charges,—to which party should the Whampoa Compradores Cumshaw be charged?"

The Committee were unanimously of opinion that the comprador's fee is all times a charge to be borne by the ship, as a port charge.

PAYMENT OF FREIGHT.

In answer to an appeal respecting payment of freight for which no time has been specified in the Bill of Lading the Committee unanimously agreed that freight is payable on delivery of the goods when no agreement exists to the contrary.—That where otherwise expressed the freight of weighable goods is payable on the net weight delivered.

QUESTION OF INSURANCE.

An agreement had been made to insure "merchandize" on Spanish vessels from Macao to Manila.

Are the insurers entitled to refuse the risk on its being declared to be on wheat?

The majority were of opinion that an agreement to insure "merchandize" would not, under the circumstances of this case, include wheat.

CHARGES ON RICE LADEN VESSELS.

After discussing the subject of Charges on Rice-laden vessels which are discharged at Whampoa, and comparing the separate statements, the Sub-Committee came to the conclusion, that it would be just and expedient to consider the sum paid to the Hoppo the accuracy of which in amount was satisfactorily ascertained, as a charge on the vessel, and not on the Rice.

....	$ 939,50
And in addition thereto, the sum paid on each vessel to the Linguist for procuring the Grand Chop, and satisfying the mandarins at Whampoa, the Sub-Committee are of opinion should also be charged to the Ship.	200
Making a total of	$ 1139 50

and that all others charges should fall on the Rice

Report of the Sub-Committee appointed 4th March to take into consideration the period for which Sellers of Malwa Opium should be liable for loss of weight, damage, or inferiority

Your Sub-Committee were of opinion that three weeks to a month would be sufficient time to enable the holder of an order for opium to inspect it as to quality and weight, but being desirous that any alteration proposed should not injure the present negotiability of opium orders in the hands of the Chinese, one of the Brokers was called in, (being the only one procurable) and consulted on the subject; he entered, and seemed fully to comprehend, the views of your Committee, and thought that one month would satisfy the brokers, but he wished to consult with his principals and other brokers.

Your Committe would express as their opinion that one month from the date of an opium order should be allowed to the purchaser for ascertaining its weight and quality, after which all responsibility on the part of the grantor should cease, and that a clause to this effect should be inserted in all delivery orders, in addition to the present clause of "risk expence and responsibility."

QUESTION RESPECTING OPIUM.

When an allowance is made for inferiority of Malwa opium and a further allowance for short weight, whether the latter to be in proportion to the reduced, or the original price:

The opinion was unanimous that the allowance for short weight is to be computed from the value of the Chest after the deduction for inferiority has been made.

An Opium order had been purchased from a Chinese, and the Opium was transferred to the purchaser on board the receiving ship. Some months afterwards it was discovered that one of the Chests was six balls short. Upon whom should such deficiency fall?

The Committee was of opinion that the delivery having been completed without objection made, no responsibility can attach to the grantors of the order.

To the question whether the Drawer of an Opium order is liable only to the Chinese broker to whom he sells or to the holder whoever he may be,—the Committee answered:

The drawer of an Opium order is answerable to the holder whoever he may be.

An Opium order had been purchased from a Chinese and was retained upwards of six weeks in the possession of the buyer. On presentation at the receiving ship the contents were not fully delivered, but next day Opium of similar quality was tendered to complete the order. The holder of the order requests to know if he can be compelled to accept other opium, or is he entitled to a compensation in money.

It was the opinion of the committee that if the order had been sent on board the ship for the transfer of the Opium, in reasonable time, the Opium would have been forthcoming, and that unless proof was adduced of its not having been on board for a reasonable time after the date of the order, the holder cannot claim any Compensation beyond similar Opium as tendered.

RESPECTING INTEREST.

The opinion of the Committe was requested as to whether it is the mercantile custom to allow interest in account to parties consigning to this port, the returns for which are to be partly in produce under hypothecation to the H. E. I. Company, and partly in Bills of Exchange?

The Committee replied that it is not the mercantile custom of Canton to allow interest on balances or to keep an interest account with absent constituents, except under special arrangements.

In answer to a question on the subject, the Committee came to the conclusion that interest in account and otherwise, should be calculated at the rate of 365 and not 360 days per annum.

DAMAGE &c. ON TEA

Report of the Sub-Committee appointed to take into consideration the most expedient and equitable mode of settling with the Chinese for claims from abroad for country damage and plunder or Tea, and for inferiority to muster evidently fraudulent. It appears from the information of Mr. Lindsay, a member of the Sub-Committee, and formerly of the East India Company's Factory, that this body was in the habit of adopting three different modes of settlement, varying according to the nature of the loss for which compensation was to be recovered.

In case of Tea being entirely false packed, it was formerly the usage, as well in the East India Company's as the American trade, to require, in compensation from the Chinese, two chests of Tea for each one so found. But of late in lieu here the more general practice among the Americans in all cases of damage or fraud, to regulate the amount of compensation by the loss actually sustained; estimating the claim at what the Tea would have sold for if good, with the addition of interest at the rate of one per cent per month to the date of recovery; or calculating the Exchange without Interest at the current rate of Bills drawn on Canton at the place of settlement. This course it appears to the Sub-Committee is the best for general adoption; and they recommend that, when practicable, in order to obviate the difficulty presented by a difference in the denomination of the currency in the two Countries, the sum to be received be fixed by drawing a Bill at the current rate of exchange, rather than by a charge of Interest.

Report of the Sub-Committee appointed to consider and report upon the questions respecting Insolvency.

The enquiry on the subject having been read, it was agreed that insolvency in Canton is conducted as elsewhere by the dishonour of an acceptance &c.; that, in case of insolvency, and the Merchant refusing to deliver his property for the benefit of his creditors, it is recommended that publicity be resorted to, that his conduct may be exposed to deserved reprobation, and the public put on its guard against granting him further credit.

As no compulsory measures can be adopted in Canton, it is recommended, that merchants be mutually accommodating, and in all cases reasonably and promptly pursue that course to which they could be compelled in countries where law prevails.

ARBITRATION REGULATIONS.

1. Each Arbitrated Committee shall, in its award, fix such fee as to its members may seem fit for the particular case, but sixteen Dollars shall be considered the minimum, and one hundred Dollars the maximum of such charge.

2. The Arbitration fee shall be payable by the losing party, but the Committee have power to alter this rule when they see occasion.

3. In regard to references the General Committee may charge or remit one, but if fees should be charged, Forty Dollars shall be the maximum, and Five Dollars the minimum of such one.

4. As references to the Committee of Arbitration may in some instances involve private matters, and it may be desirable that the names of parties, documents, and evidence should be considered confidential, while the decisions of the Committee with the leading points are on the Records for general information; a full report of the grounds of the decisions of the Committee shall be entered in an arbitration book to be kept for that purpose, and to this book access shall be had by members of the Chamber on a requisition of six members to the General Committee, two thirds of whom must concur.

As branch or member of a public body, the arbitration Committee is to be considered a public Committee, but in practice, when so required by either party submitting a question to its decision, (with the knowledge of the other) it is in the strictest sense a private Committee, in which case the members are pledged to honourable secrecy, and the safe keeping of the papers.

THE COHONG.

Memorial from the chief proprietors of authorities, desiring to limit the number of the hong merchants to thirteen. Dated Canton, September, 1837.

A RESPECTFUL memorial, the sacred perusal of which is solicited, in relation to the merchants engaged in foreign trade, showing that the hong were sufficiently numerous for the transaction of business, and requesting that the old regulations in regard to the appointment of such merchants be restored, with the view of clearly laying down a limit, and of arresting wide-spreading evils.

Our humble opinion is, that, the port of Canton being open to a general commerce with foreigners, it is of the first importance, that the hong merchants, by whom the trade is conducted, should be proper men; in which case alone can the everlasting kindness of the throne be awarded. To enable the ship-traveled people to be, universally, recipients of joy and advantage, and to prevent unqualified and curious persons, are we solely upon them. Their relation to the affairs of the customs is not then at all trivial.

Formerly the hongs engaged in foreign trade were in all thirteen; but in length of days unpleasure having arisen, some among them became, in succession, defaulters to the revenue, and fell into debt, on which account they absconded, or were subjected to punishment. Hence in the 11th year of Keaking (1806), the then superintendent of customs. Tikking, presented a memorial, wherein he requested that a senior merchant should be appointed to regulate all the affairs of the hongs; and that in future, whenever a new merchant should be chosen, the senior and all the hong merchants should jointly bind themselves by security for him. In answer to this memorial the following imperial edict was received:

"Tikking has presented a report of the results of his investigations of the state of the custom-house. The merchants engaged in foreign trade in Canton, who enter into security for the payment of the duties, have hitherto been admitted to fill their places upon the vacancy of only one or two merchants being given for them. Then, when involved in distresses and reduced to circumstances they have either become defaulters, or have fallen into debt and absconded; and thus, much evil and many illegalities have resulted. Let it be as the said superintendent of customs has requested. Let a careful selection be made, from among all the hong merchants, of one or two individuals of wealth and substantial connections, and of honest and sterling character; and let them be appointed to the general management of the affairs of the hongs engaged in foreign trade, to lead and direct all the other hong merchants and with equity and justice to amend what is wrong; and let the names of the senior merchants thus selected be recorded in the public offices, and reported to the Board. Whenever a new merchant is to be chosen to fill up a vacant place, let the whole body of the hong merchants, senior and others, enter into a joint and mutually responsible security for him, and let the matter be communicated, in a distinct form, to the Board. If any one be expelled or retire, let it be reported, that whatever related to him may be erased. And every year, on the day when the custom-house is closed, let a complete list of the hong merchants' names be made, and presented to the Board for examination and reference. Let the Board of Revenue be made acquainted with these directions. Respect this."

Afterwards, in the ninth year of Taoukwang (1829), the then superintendent of customs, Yenlouï, finding that much would come forward as hong merchants, and fearing the loss of some merchants, through the insolvability of the suretyship, purposely made hindrances and objections, recommended for establishment some new and altered regulations, which, having been laid before the throne, the following imperial edict was received:

"Yenlaing has laid before us a memorial, requesting a change in the regulations in reference to the bringing in of new merchants. In the province of Kwangtung, hongs are established for carrying on foreign trade. Formerly, a man was allowed to become a hong merchant, on obtaining the security of one or two of their number: but in the reign of Keăk ng, permission was given to appoint senior merchants to conduct the current affairs, and to require of any one, being chosen as a new merchant, that he should have the jointly signed security of the senior and all the other merchants. These senior merchants have continually been in the practice of purposely making objections, so that the new merchants are too few to complete the regulated numbers; and it is difficult to get the vacant numbers filled up. Hence, for several years past, while the foreign ships have been daily increasing in number, the number of hongs has been constantly diminishing; so that it is difficult for them to give due attention to all things, and illegalities rapidly spring up. It is certainly right, taking these things into consideration, to make a change. Let it be as is requested. Hereafter, if a man in opulent circumstances and of good connections prefer a request to be made hong merchant, and the superintendent of customs find that what he state of himself is correct, let him be put on trial for one or two years; and it be then he found really correct and upright in his dealings, and accordant to the character of the foreign merchants, and have paid up all the duties without deficiencies, let him, according to the old regulations, obtain the security of one or two hong merchants, and on so doing receive his appointment. Let the rule, that the joint security of the senior and all the other merchants is to be procured, be forthwith annulled. Respect this."

These directions were respectfully recorded and observed; and from that time onwards, merchants have successively come forward to supply vacancies, so that the full number of thirteen hongs, formerly existing, is now again complete; and there is no cause for anxiety on the ground of there not being enough to pay due attention to business; among these, is Pwan Wanhoe, of the hong Jinhoe, who has been for many years, and, though frequently urged to it, has never yet obtained securities, nor in consequence been reported to the Board; also, Yeh Yuenchang of the new hong Footae, Le Futae of the new hong Tungchang with Yang Yenkwang of the new hong Anchang—not yet entered on the list presented to the Board, who have been on trial from upwards of one, to about two, years. These persons we have commanded, in obedience to the last-established regulations, speedily to obtain the true and faithful securities of one or two men, that their names may be reported to the Board, and they be duly appointed, in order to give weight to the principle of responsibility; and for doing this, we have limited them to a period of one month. If the period pass over, without their obtaining a merchant to give a caution for them, we will immediately communicate with each other, and erase their names, at the same time making inquiry if there are any transaction commenced by them during their period of trial, and yet unfinished, and in that case strictly urging the completion thereof, under governmental inspection.

In making regulations, however, the first and most important thing is, to ascertain what is most suitable; and in establishing laws, it is desirable to adopt such as may long continue unchanged. The new regulations, sanctioned on the representation of Yenlouï, and now in force, we, your majesty's ministers, have found, after diligent and faithful examination, and joint discussion, to have been suited to the past, but to be unsuitable to the present state of things; and to have given rise to evils, which result in impeding their operations and rendering them ineffective. The full number of hongs engaged in foreign trade at Canton has, for a very long period, been thirteen; and even when the vessels have been numerous, and the amount of duties large, there has never been any anxiety in regard to their being unable to attend to all their concerns. But Yenlaing, seeing that the hongs were weakened and reduced to half their number, and impelled by this temporary state of circumstances, effected the alteration—that any opulent person, applying of his own accord to become hong merchant, if his representations be found on inquiry to be true, should be prescribed was not once made a subject of consideration. Thus the common people, striving together for gain, and snatching every opportunity—the appointments may go on gradually and endlessly increasing. Then the merchants being numerous, their characters must be various and often not free from alloy. In this way, it must indeed become difficult to pay due attention to all affairs.

During upwards of ten years past, si ver bullion has been exported, and the p isonous opium has been spread throughout the empire, giving rise to a crowd of illegalities—smuggling contraband articles, and evading the lawful duties. While at this we see scoundrels who are without, entering into compact to do evil, it would be difficult to ensure that the custom-house does not actually commence within. Four, in the third month of the present year, a criminal, Lwang Ake, was apprehended as a smuggler, and on his trial there appeared a letter, from the hong merchant Le Futae to an escaped criminal Ching Tungping, wherein allusion was made to Le Heaouping, as a certain in the department of Shaouking, as concerned in the establishment of that hong. I, your minister Tang, in consequence, represented the circumstance against him to your majesty and received your imperial pleasure to remove from Le Heaouping his rank, and to bring him to the capital, to be tried. Although the trial of the case has not yet terminated, yet it is already plain that the said merchant, not being sufficient, has connected himself with lawless people. If now, upon investigation of this subject is being made with the utmost strictness and closest attention, the spread of the evil be not quickly arrested, it is truly to be feared that these illegalities will increase to a very great degree.

Moreover, the plan of placing men on a course of trial was adopted as an important means of selecting good merchants. But how unfathomable is the human mind! How shall it be ascertained that men are not, during the one or two years of trial, artfully patching up, to save appearances, in order that, after their appointment as merchants, they may pursue their law-subverting plans? Then, when the time has elapsed, and the necessary securities have been obtained, the leak in the patched kettle is, when too late, discovered; there is the law pursue such a person, yet how is the loss already suffered to be made up? Hence it is perfectly clear, and beyond a doubt, that the plan of passing through a course of trial is not in the least to be depended on. But the old regulation, sanctioned at the desire of Tikking, that the securities given for a merchant shall consist of a joint bond entered into by all, being agreeable to the common and general sense of justice, best safe, and substantial as the security it gives! By the framers of the new regulation, it was found fault with, as giving scope to make objections and present hindrances; and hence they altered it, deciding hastily to sanction an appointment on the surety of one or two merchants. They did not call to mind, that the result of such objections and hindrances—delay—is but the lesser evil: for these one or two merchants, if not his immediate relatives or intimates, are probably induced to secure him by presents; and when suddenly affairs are upset, the injury that is thereby caused is indeed great.

Furthermore, in all cases of prosecution of these merchants the property sequestered not sufficing to pay all demands, the whole body of the merchants has been directed to pay them by instalments. This practice has now by long usage become a rule; and, whether standing surety for the defaulter or not, none can in the least degree evade it. But when they have to pay for one whom they did not secure, the payers must indeed find it difficult quietly to submit. Is it not much better, that they for whom they pay should be secured by them, by which a remedy will be obtained for careless security, in the caution which each will observe?

Our feeble and obscure views, we, your ministers, would humbly represent to be these;—That, as the number of the hong merchants has been filled up, and there is no deficiency, but the number is sufficient for conducting affairs, a limitation should at once be placed prescribed: That it is our duty to request, that hereafter, when any of the thirteen hong merchants fails, or is for any cause expelled, or retires, then as each vacancy occurs, permission be given to supply it; but that, except in such case, it be not permitted, without sufficient cause, to add a single merchant to the number. That it is unnecessary to prescribe a period for going through a course of trial, vainly adopting a dogmal, but wortel, which is not beneficial, to this point; a merchant, the old rule should be established, of giving a general security; the whole body of merchants, seniors and others, being required jointly and carefully to select an opulent, honorable, and upright man, and to sign their names together to a bond of security for him,—the whole to be laid in a separate form before the Board of Revenue, that the man may be fully appointed: That not the slightest reason and hindrance be suffered, so that every monopolizing purpose may be disappointed: That, lastly, in all other respects the former regulations be retained, as the rule according to which all affairs are to be safely conducted. Thus a fixed limit will be laid down; and, it is hoped, the numbers will be properly circumscribed, and not in excess; those who become merchants will bring with them large property, so that there will be something on which the responsibility can rest; and those who secure them will, as a matter of necessity, seek for really and substantially good persons. It may be expected also to be not wanting in advantage, in enriching the revenue, and as tending utterly to put an end to all subjects in wrongdoing. We present our views before the throne, with the desire of reforming the affairs of the custom-house, and unite together in a joint memorial, respectfully awaiting the imperial decision as to their propriety or impropriety; and to this end we humbly solicit our sovereign to cast on them a glance, and to vouchsafe instructions. A respectfull memorial

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Sir,—I have just been looking over Capt. Scott's letter to you of the 18th inst. and have been most mournfully amused by the perusal.

It is truly a melancholy thing to see a gentleman wandering in a labyrinth of inconsistencies; and wilfully shutting his eyes against all rational conclusions, determined, at all hazards, to lose himself in the obscure mazes of error. Throughout the whole of that discursive epistle, blind prejudice seems to have been his guide, rather than sober reason. The main point, however, upon which the whole of his assertions turn, in regard to myself, is, that I can be none else than his most deadly foe! that my remarks to you "could only have been dictated by piqued vanity or party spirit" and that, in short, they were made for the "indulgence of private malevolence"! Without answering at present this somewhat plebeian assertion, it may not be amiss to make a cursory comment on this flagellating affair; and, taking the paragraphs individually as they come, try them by the touch-stone of candour.

The letter consists of six paragraphs—the postscript of four. Let us deal them summarily and fairly with this fierce Cat O' ten tails which the Commodore has undertaken to wield, in justification and in proof, of his inability to use the Cat O' nine.

Take we then § first. With that Editorial remark to which he alludes, in this paragraph, and which is nevertheless consonant to my own views, I had nothing to do; it is therefore gross assumption on his part, to say, that "you adopted as your own," remarks made by me—"remarks which," in his opinion, "could only have been dictated by piqued vanity or party spirit." A considerable share of ambition has perhaps fallen to our lot; but we assure Capt. Scott that, in no rank in society could he possibly stand in our way, so as to excite our envy or "pique our vanity"—"party spirit," in his acceptation of the term, we disclaim. Turn we now to § second of his letter. From whatever motive the crew of his ship acted, in rescuing the man he wished to punish, I am unable to say. He tells us twice, that they acted under "a delusion." Delusion or not, they opposed his authority, by rescuing the man. This was mutinous. He goes on to say, however, "an unarmed attempt was made to obtain possession of the man, without effect." I am willing to believe that the first part of this sentence, slipped from his pen unawares, in the hurry of writing—"in furore scribendi"—or that, in subscribing his name to what his amanuensis had written, he over-looked it; otherwise common candour ought to have made him pause, before he penned such a broad, unblushing assertion. He and his chief and second mates were armed. And when the attempt was made to regain possession of the prisoner. It is a notorious fact that the chief mate did, very properly too, when he was in the melee, draw his sword, and had a scuffle with a fellow who attempted to oppose or disarm him. So much for the "unarmed attempt." and paragraph 2nd.

§ third. I have spoken on the point involved in this paragraph in my former letter. My opinion is still unchanged. I think it would have displayed more "prudence" in Capt. Scott, had he, under the then existing circumstances, modestly declined the proffered honour of hoisting the magisterial flag. As to his "pretensions" to the office, in consequence of his being the senior commander present, belonging to the late E. I. C's. maritime service, I can see no foundation for them. This is foreign to the question -- the service is defunct, and the shipping in this port under another regime.

§ fourth. "As to Pains and Penalties," he says "which it seems I may incur for acting by virtue of the orders of H. M'. Superintendents" (Chief Superintendent I supposed he means vide § third) I have no great dread, and am rather amused at the powers being called in question the "I dare say he has no great dread; but this is not calculated to satisfy the doubts of others. He is at liberty to do with his own ship what he pleases; but I shall try to "amuse" him once more, by calling in question his powers when brought into operation on board of other ships. I am a lover of "good order," and I therefore ask him, would his name, even though fortified by that of Capt. Elliot, guard any master of a ship against damages awarded against him in a British Court, who, having acted under his orders, happened to be brought up before it? Until he can give a satifactory guarantee under his hand to secure against this contingent, we can listen no longer to this saying about "Pains and Penalties."

§ fifth. Had my first letter come under the observation of Capt. Scott, he there would have seen that our views partly coincide. I conceive the principle upon which Capt. Elliot acted to be good—there certainly ought to be some recognised Magisterial authority in Whampoa Reach; but, I cannot go the length that Capt. Scott would wish us, "not wink at even a stretch of authority." This is like the daw which, as the fable says, tried to flaunt it over other birds, decked out in plumage not his own. I see no necessity for "even a stretch of authority," if it is, as "emphatically declared", by Capt. Elliot, that the right of every master of a merchant vessel to punish corporally, is "one with that of a Captain of a man of war."

§ sixth. We shall comment on this anon.

§ seventh (the 1st of the P S.) In the first part of this paragraph, Capt. Scott says, "when the crew had refused full obedience to my orders, I did not feel, under the existing circumstances, that I could offer for myself any admissible justification. If I resorted to arms"! When a mutinous crew rise up in rebellion against their Commander, and refuse "full obedience to his orders," if that is not a time to have recourse to arms, when, in the name of common sense, is the time?—There seems some mystery here at least; he says that he told them to beware of any attack on the property of the ship, for he would shoot any man concerned in it." Now is the time! Ah no! There was, it seems, no need for such stern measures with those men—they were decent mutineers "Grim-visag'd war, hath smooth'd his wrinkled front," and now comes on the "weak piping time of peace;" the men, says Capt. Scott, "were piped down and, "in my life never saw a Sunday passed so quietly and decently." Certes, all the Sundays the Commodore has passed on board of ship, must have been "rough ones." Quietness there may have been in contradistinction to noise; I do not however understand the decency of a ship's crew, when it is in a state of sullen mutiny. Captains Pitcairn, Vaux and Hewe, together with Mr. Greaves the 2nd. officer of the Earl Balcarras, were on board the whole day, at Capt. Scott's request, ready to prevent any out-break; there was no Divine Service performed in the ship that day; the galley fire was out; and the men had no food served out to them—and, this was a day of quietness and decency! on reading Capt. Scott's communication through the first seven paragraphs—where we see him trying, ineffectually, to inflict corporal punishment on an offender—where we find his crew refusing full obedience "to his authority—where we see him stopping their food, until he should have their "entire submission,"—where, "in the end," he says, "they should not escape him, they might be assured," and when we hear him threatening to shoot any man who should make an attack on the property of the ship, one is led to infer that "in the end" he certainly would manfully carry his measure. But no. The two following paragraphs demolish this delusion. And we are left in wonderment at his talking of the "contrition" of the five chief mutineers,—his "humanity"—"prudence and firmness," and above all, at his mild apology for those arrant malcontents who took his ship from him:—they having done so, through "pure delusion." Those five men were let off, however, completely unpunished—and thus the crew, undeterred by wholesome example, left ripe and fully matured for another out-break when it shall suit their humour, and although it has been necessary to put three or four of them in irons for gross misconduct, Capt. Scott, by his own showing, is quite content with these his "own proceedings" and with the satisfactory conduct of his crew!!! I cannot fathom, and admire prudence and firmness who can, I meet them; but this laboured apology for a mutinous crew is altogether beyond my comprehension. Tenderness for crime may be carried so far, that it at length becomes crime itself. I know from experience, and am far indeed from assuming that, because a mutiny occurs, it is the result of the inability of the officers; but I leave any rational man to judge, whether, after a mutiny has occurred, there is not inability to be implied somewhere, when it cannot be quelled without the aid of others unconnected with the ship.

In reply to the concluding stormy paragraphs of the letter and postcript, we beg to assure Capt. Scott that he is in error in supposing that we attacked, or even wish to attack, his private character. I spoke of him as a public functionary. And however "old" and thread-worn he may deem the "cloak" of "public character," it was in connexion with the recent disturbances on board of his ship that I questioned his pretensions to, and his qualifications for, the office he has undertaken. I understand that he is likely soon to have plenty of business on his hands, in his magisterial capacity; then shall we have an opportunity of judging, by the mode in which he discharges his duties, whether people will, or will not, be inclined to look pretty closely to the "individual who temporarily hoists the flag of Office at Whampoa."

If what I have written were not the offspring of cool thought, I might dread the "contempt" with which Capt. Scott threatens to treat, what he is pleased to call "the assertions of Sebastian." His contempt, I opine, will not much disturb us. The contemptible only are afraid of contempt. But he is to take no further "notice" of us! we are sorry for this, for then would we dare him to refute any one of our, so called, "assertions." We think however, that our constitutional equanimity will be able to sustain us under the load of his silent displeasure. Did we write from motives of private malice or for the especial "notice" of Capt Scott, the concluding explosion of his Honoure Pentscript might "pique our vanity" and wound our "party spirit;" but, we assure him, both are still unhurt—not blooming like the rose." And I shall conclude this comment in the words of an author of good man—for whom I entertain the highest respect—to which I beg Capt. Scott's "notice"—"It is possible, I am persuaded, to feel the strongest conviction of the error certain men may hold, without cherishing a particle of ill will against those who hold them."

I remain,
Dear Sir,
Your obedient servant,
SEBASTIAN.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

This meeting took place on the 6th inst. Mr. Matheson in the chair, who stated that the meeting had been called together for the purpose of receiving the report of the Committee, as well as the opinion of the General meeting on the points laid before the Committee, which opinions, if approved of, should in future be considered as the customs of the port, in similar cases. The report was then read by the Secretary, which with the opinions of the Committee on cases laid before them will be found in another column.

It was then moved by Mr. Robertson, seconded by Mr. W. Cragg, and carried nem. con., that the Report of the Committee, as well as the opinions declared by them on the different subjects, be received and approved of.

The Chairman then stated that much attention had been given by the Committe to the state of the Cohong, and that a Sub-Committee had been appointed to collect information and report on "the present state of the Co hong, on the causes which have led to their present embarrassed condition, and on measures which would tend to place on a secure and permanent basis the interests of the foreign trade." The sub-committee had not however yet brought their labours to a close and there as far as they went would facilitate the enquiries to be continued by a committee next to be elected. Some notes relating to the Co-hong, drawn up by the Sub-Committee, were then read to the meeting.

The Chairman then called the attention of the meeting to Rules 8 and 16 of the regulations, by which the functions of the members of the Committee were to cease, and according to which a new Committee was to be elected on Monday the 6th, the Secretary to act as scrutineer.

Mr. Dent then moved that the thanks of the Chamber be given to the Chairman, for the zeal, energy, and attention he has ever given to the interests of the Chamber, which was seconded by Mr. Gray, and carried unanimously.

It was then proposed by Mr. How, seconded by Mr. Wm. Cragg, that the thanks of the meeting be given to the Committee, for their able management of the affairs of the Chamber, which motion was unanimously carried.

On the 6th the election of a new Committee had the following result. British members, Messrs. Jas. Matheson, Dent, Turner, Beswick and Wallace. American, Messrs. Oliver, Delano, and Talbot. Parsee, Messrs. Dadabhoy Rustomjee and Nanabhoy Framjee. Dutch Mr. S. van Rassel, and as open to be elected from any nation, Mr. Moolras. These same Gentlemen constituted the former Committee. At Chairman the Committee have elected Mr. Green, and Deputy Chairman Mr. Turner.

We have been obligingly favored by a translation of the local Government's memorial to the Emperor on the subject of the Hongs, the sum of which is that their number should not be encreased beyond the present thirteen, and that the present system of mutual responsibility should not on any account be departed from. We have not space to notice this document more at length, this as well as the first annual report of the Committee of the General Chamber having taken up all the room we have to spare. Want of space also compels us to reserve for our next the letters from Capt. Chris. Biden and "Mirator," and that from "A Stranger" on marine insurances.

Again an edict has appeared, urging the departure of some of our neighbours, as will be seen from the following translation. The time for urging the departure of these Gentlemen, just at the beginning of the shipping season, seems to be strangely chosen, and this, if the order is insisted on, will afford the very best reason for not obeying it.

The translation above referred to we have been unable to obtain, and must therefore content ourselves with giving to the public the principal points of it, such as they were explained to us. It is meant we understood, by the Hoppo, and reminds the Hong merchants of the former orders (contained in the edict we mentioned as having been issued, in our last) relative to the traitorous barbarians, Jardine, Dent, Davis and Morrison, * and it is therein asked why the Hong merchants have not before reported on the subject, sternly commanding them to ascertain when those individuals, already named, intend to obey the order. We hope in our next to give the exact translation of this edict, of which we can at present only present an imperfect outline.

* The two last names have evidently been included in this edict by some blunder in Peking, one of the Gentlemen, formerly belonging to the Company's Factory, and well known as a Chinese scholar, having left China three years ago, and the other not being engaged in any commercial transactions, but the Chinese interpreter for H. M. Superintendent, whose permission to reside here is of course included in that given by the Imperial Government to H. B. M. Commission. It is a ludicrous circumstance that the Hong merchants, not knowing to whom to address the order to be gone for Mr. Davis, sent it to the house of Mr. Davidson, (absent at present) considering him probably a near relation.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON GOODS.—Grey Longcloths have rather declined; there is a pretty large parcel of American of good stout quality offering, which has interfered with the sale of the English goods, the supply of which is very moderate. In COTTON YARN the market is very quiet.

WOOLLENS.—We have heard of no sales, but the market is firm for SPANISH STRIPES, and LONGELLS, the importations being so small hitherto.

RICE.—The stock of foreign rice very great, and little disposition to buy.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER without alteration. BETELNUT, from one party wishing to monopolize the whole, has advanced. TIN declining.

COTTON,—there has been very little doing during the week, and although the prices for the better description have not declined, sales could with difficulty be effected at previous rates. The lower qualities are still more depressed than before, parties being anxious to realize before further importations. We understand that a small lot of 100 bales of Madras has been sold a 8.5. and that 10.5 @ 10.6 is offered for the only parcel in the market of about 1000 bales Tinnevelly.

OPIUM.—The only demand for Opium is for the coast, and we learn that Patna has rather advanced at Macao. In this market the price is quite nominal, and Malwa has changed hands within these few days to some extent a 475 @ 480. The Mandarins have been very active lately in making seizures.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—A considerable quantity has arrived, but holders ask much higher prices than exporters are willing to give.

TEA.—The merchants have, after some demur, settled the good and fine grades of Pekoe Keok Congous, made by themselves, at the prices quoted in our price current, which are 6 a 8 Taels under those of last season. The teamen have not yet come to terms, as they will lose considerably at these rates.

THE CANTON PRESS.

VOL. 3d. No. 11. CANTON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER, 18TH, 1837 No. 145

From the Chinese Repository, for October.

ART. VIII. Imperial edict, communicated to the hong merchants from the hoppo, requiring certain foreigners to leave Canton.

WEN, superintendent of maritime customs in Canton, &c., to the hong merchants, Howqua and others, for their full information. On the 22nd of October, I received from the governor and lieut.-governor the annexed communication.

"We received, on the 19th of October, by an express of the Board of War, a dispatch from the Council of state, addressed to Tang, governor of Kwangtung and Kwangse, and Ke, lieut.-governor of Kwangtung, to be enjoined also on Wan, superintendent of customs,'—and containing, under date the 29th September, 1837, the following.

"Imperial edict. 'A report has been laid before us, representing that, in the province of Kwangtung, remonstrances and illegalities increase daily; enumerating six particulars; and earnestly requesting that orders may be given for amendment thereof. The memorialist states, that of the multitudinous cases of plundering which occur in that province, the majority are attributable to associated banditti, bearing such names as the Teente Brotherhood, the Triad Society, &c.; that these club together in bands and fraternities, and are ever and anon injuring and troubling the people; and that every instance of complaint affords occasion, for exacted and numerous extortions. Again, he states, that the unregistered districts in that province, when carrying the tribute of grain, have sometimes, as it is said, reduced it into money at the extravagant rate of six or seven taels for a shih [about eight or nine dollars for 130 catties]; that they are very lax towards their writers and police, receiving bribes to screen and shelter them. The report then points out that the storing up of grain is a convenience to the people; and that there is nothing better than to establish free granaries, and to fetch the grain, furnished to fill them by the people themselves, as a provision for the occasional wants of years of dearth,—a measure alike advantageous to the officers and the people. In regard to governmental cruising vessels, the objects of their establishment are the apprehension of thieves, and the prevention of smuggling: but of late, the report states the only thing aimed at by them is, to receive from the whole fleet of the country petty and unlicensed fees; they do not at all apprehend smugglers; and all the stations and posts of the maritime police have gradually come to be mere names, without any effective reality. In the salt department of that province, it is needful to put a stop to all clandestine encroachment; and it is essential, from time to time, to examine thoroughly, and adopt measures for making a full end thereof. With regard to all that relates to tolls and duties, it is still more needful to remove and cut away every evil and illegality. The depraved foreigners residing in Canton, Macao, and others, and the receiving ships already at Lintin, should all be forthly expelled. Let Tang and his colleagues make faithful examination in regard to each of these six subjects spoken of in the memorial, and if there be such illegalities as are named, they must feel it imperative on them to lay aside every consideration of [] saing others, and proceed with truth and fidelity to to correct what is wrong. It is our sincere hope that the civil administration, and the military defences, may all be really and practically useful. In that case all will be right and proper. Let a copy of the original address be sent, and these commands be made known to Tang, and Ke, and by them enjoined on Wan. Respect this.'

"The council of state having, in obedience to the imperial pleasure, forwarded the above, we, the governor and lieut. governor, have received the same. We will proceed accordingly, in distinct documents, to direct inquiry on the several points alluded to in the five clauses, beginning "in the affairs of the police, there must not be any remissness or procrastination allowed:" also, on the subject of the remaining clause, "that, in relation to tolls and duties, all illegalities would be removed, and correctness restored,"—we will forward a communication to the naval commander-in-chief, expressing our hope, that he will immediately drive away and send back to their country the receiving ships anchored in the seas about Lintin and Lantao,—and that he will, after careful consideration, write in answer, and inform us of the line of action adopted by him, to enable us to reply to the throne: we will still further instruct the judicial commissioner, to proceed immediately, in concert with financial and territorial commissioners, to act in accordance with the instructions contained in our separate dispatches; and, on the several points noticed in the original memorial and in the imperial edict now received, to issue directions that the imperial pleasure may be respectfully obeyed and acted on; at the same time, also, to detail consecutively the measures adopted in reference to each clause, and report the same for our examination, so as to enable us to make our reply to the throne.

"Besides all this, it is our duty to forward to you (the hoppo) this communication, for your examination. We trust you will immediately command the hong merchants to expel with severity those depraved foreigners, ——— and others, residing in Canton; also, that you will examine and discover if any of your attendant officers have indeed sold to deprived natives the information of warrants being out against them, thus enabling them to procure others to take their place, and so giving rise to gross illegalities; furthermore, whether the number of officers deputed to act in the custom-houses of Canton and Macao should or should not be reduced. We hope that you will grant us a reply that we may perform what is required of us; and that, as regards the other particulars of the memorial and imperial edict, you will act with respectful obedience, and enforce what is required. Annexed is a copy of the original memorial."

The above communication having reached me, the hoppo, I, on the receipt of it, proceed to issue this order, to give information. When the order reaches the said merchants, let them immediately pay obedience to it, by instituting inquiry concerning each of the foreigners unlawfully residing in Canton, namely ———, ———, and ———, and by speedily and with severity, expelling them. They must not allow them to linger for an instant. Let them also with the utmost speed report the period of the said foreigners' departure for Macao, to enable a reply to be made to the throne. This is an affair in which the imperial pleasure has been received, requiring examination. The said merchants must, therefore, by all means, act in obedience to it. If they dare to connive and screen the foreigners, they themselves shall be held solely responsible. Let each, then, tremblingly obey. Oppose not. A special order. October 25th, 1837.

* Messrs. Jardine, Dent, Turpe and Malechon; the two latter names can only be guessed at, but we have it from good authority, that they are not meant for either Davis or Morrison, but probably Davidson and Matheson. Ed. C. Rp.

The following taken from the Repository, as an extract from Bishop Bruguiere's travels in China only three years ago, reminds us strongly of the gangs of convicts or galley-slaves in France before the revolution, as described by Vidocq, himself frequently one of such gangs, and afterwards police-spy under the Imperial government, only the french convicts were not so passive as the Chinese seem to have been.

"We met some convicts, whom they were leading into exile, bound together by a long chain; when they saw us, the troops that conducted them sate down upon the ground, one soldiers alone holding the end of the chain. Immediately a dispute arose between the convicts and my followers. "We want money," shouted the malefactors. "You shall have none," replied my guides. "We will allow ourselves to be crushed by the chariot wheels," exclaimed the wretches, throwing themselves down in the middle of the road. "Clear the way," shouted the driver. "We will not—give us money, or we will die here" From words they came to blows; my people dragged them by the chain from under the chariot, not without receiving some smart blows. My guide gave a vigorous pull, and remained master of the field of battle. Unfortunately the convicts had their wives with them, and these ladies took their place and renewed the combat. In this country, to lay hands on a female, even in self-defence, is an affair of state. It was necessary, therefore, to have recourse to prayers and compliments. My interpreter, who was very polite, made them an eloquent harangue, but nothing could shake their purpose. They placed themselves under the feet of the horses, and declared they would not stir without money. We were forced to negociate, and purchase a free passage for about six francs. We might have had recourse to a mandarin, but the accusation would have exposed me to the imminent hazard of discovery. The soldiers looked on as if they had no concern whatever in this singular combat; instead of checking the insolence of their prisoners, they remained tranquil spectators, doubtless expecting their share of the spoil. In some districts of China they rob openly, but rarely commit murder. Within thirty leagues of Peking, there has been for some years a society of robbers: they plunder publicly, and in the face of day. The magistrates who ought to watch over the public safety favor this disorder, and share in the spoil."

SIAM.

Subsequent to the issue of our last number, in which we noticed the arrival of the Penang from Siam, we were put in possession of some private correspondence in addition to our advices by the same vessel, from which we now proceed to lay before our readers such particulars as may prove of interest.

The low state of trade at Bangkok appears to be solely caused by the rage for a species of lottery-gambling called Hor Hor which has of late prevailed, and of the effects of which we gave some account in our number of 1st December last year, when this pernicious system, under the special auspices of the king of Siam, had only commenced. It has since been carried to a still more ruinous extent, and has been productive of the most frightful disorders. Its unfortunate victims reduced to nakedness and starvation, having betaken themselves to courses of open and lawless violence to supply their wants. Street-robbery has been carried to such a length that scarce any one dared venture out in decent attire, unless willing to encounter the risk of returning home naked. Success in this petty sort of theft led to attempts of a more formidable kind, and dwelling-houses were attacked and plundered while sale, and in orders have been perpetrated when resistance was offered. These outrages, of which the avarice of the king had been the main cause, at last brought down the vengeance of the governor of Kapoen, upon the offenders, and they were caught in hundreds. Suspected persons having been brought to confess against themselves, were also tortured into an accusation of their accomplices by being flogged until their backs were raw, and then exposed to a scorching sun. A prisoner in this condition is not likely to trouble himself with a long search in pursuit of his accomplice, and he probably points out the first person he meets as his companion in guilt—who, unless some great personage in his friend, and intercedes for him, will of course be punished as a robber—"so that" says our correspondent, "if they proceed at this rate they will soon have half of Siam up and punished as thieves and robbers!" In other respects too, the industrious part of the population were of course not exempt from their share of these deplorable consequences of rage for Hor-Hor—the shopkeepers have no purchasers and their stocks remain on hand; and altogether the trade could scarce be in a worse condition. Meantime the King of Siam, who thus evinces his solicitude for the morals and welfare of his subjects, to aggravate the effect of these disasters has levied a new capitation tax of 2½ ticals throughout his dominions, under the specious pretext of building war boats to destroy the pirates who have been lately infesting the Siamese coasts—from which one might suppose that he had condescended to take a leaf out of the book of certain legislators not altogether unknown to the merchants of this Settlement, in seeking an excuse for a new tax; His majesty being left to his own guidance is able to go a trifle further to be sure and to put it on —and then orders his nobles to build the war-boats at their own cost, and pockets the tax himself. We are informed that the king of Siam has every thing contained in this paper creative to the affairs of his kingdom specially translated for his own use—and we hope that he is sometime edified. We understand however that the letters and articles on the affairs of Quedah were far from being relished—and it is said that he manifests some anxiety to possess a translation of the petition which the merchants of Penang were understood to be preparing on the subject—; feeling which it does not appear likely he will soon have it in his power to gratify.—Singapore Free Press 12th October.

AVA.

We learn that the late arrivals from Madras bringing over Dacoit bearers, Artillery bullocks and military stores, have caused no little sensation at Rangoon, from whence express upon express has been forwarded to Court on the subject. No doubt in those dispatches the little army of bearers have been metamorphosed into valiant men of arms, and the bullocks into fighting elephants, and were any one to carry to Court a true account of what has been really received here, he would chance to be counted as a fool, or, perhaps, get his head chopped off for bringing false intelligence. It would not be easy for them to believe that three large ships have been sent from Madras only to bring 300 men for carrying palanquins, some 50 or 60 bullocks and a few guns The latter would be the only intelligible part of the cargo. The more these supplies are exaggerated the better. Let the Europeans form any opinion they like on the subject, but one thing will be made very evident to them that we are quite prepared and ready for any contingency that may occur, and if they are desirous of trying their skill at another game with us, our pieces are already ranged on the board; and we will give them the first move, which, indeed, they seem to be preparing themselves to take. For want has a Woongyee boga perched up at Toung-oo with orders there to form a force? There never has been an officer of that rank at Toung-oo within the memory of the present generation, and the place itself is of far too little importance under ordinary circumstances, to call for so high an officer to reside there. Rangoon has always been the seat of government for the southern portion of the kingdom, but, perhaps experience teaches that it is not a very safe head-quarters in the event of hostilities with the English. We should rejoice were experience to teach a further lesson and emancrate the present absurd and arrogant pretensions of the new governorship of Ava. It would be wise in them to have at alone—wiser still to cultivate a friendly commercial intercourse with us and learn from us the art of rendering a country happy, wealthy and prosperous. The kingdom of Burmah possesses within herself, the most splendid resources. Her mines, her forests, her lands are unequalled. Her population is intelligent, orderly, and would be under a proper system of government, industrious What a superb prospect would open to a truly enlightened governor of such a country, would he but lend his thoughts and energies towards the protection and encouragement of all the various sources of wealth and prosperity; but to such ideas Burmese Majesty has always been a stranger. From the time of the justly celebrated Alompra, foreign conquest has always been the ambition of the kings of Ava. Arracan, Manipore, and Assam successively fall under their dominion, and the late king, taking a wider range than his predecessors, gave orders that the English Rulers of India should be brought to his feet in golden chains. The consequence to him was, that from of all that his predecessors had gained, and the establishment in his neighbourhood of a power that restrained all future flights and kept him within his proper boundaries. He has been deposed, and his sons—or appears to indulge himself in visions of glory, surpassing that of his great progenitor. He will drive the English from the countries which formerly pertained to his crown, and following them up, will drive them out of Calcutta, to——where, he cannot tell, for his geographical knowledge extends not beyond. One of his predecessors sent a fleet of war boats to insult the English in their war with France, and we doubt whether many rays of knowledge have since penetrated the geographical ignorance of the Court of Ava.—Ibidem.

CALCUTTA.

CONDITIONS TO THE OPIUM SALE.

The advertisement for the sale of Opium on Friday next, the 15th instant, contains a condition to which it is well to draw the attention of intending bidders. It is as follows:

"10.—Considerable loss and inconvenience having resulted from persons not of known credit being suffered to bid at the Opium Sales, the Public are hereby apprised, that the Superintendent of the Sale has been empowered so reject the bid of any such individual unless he shall under at the time a Deposit, either in Bank of Bengal Notes, Sub-Treasurer's Receipts, or Government Securities equal to One Thousand Rupees per Lot, (or two Hundred Rupees per Chest) on the Lot or Chests which he may offer to purchase; and it is hereby notified, that the Opium deposited for as above at the time of purchase is liable to Re-sale under the 9th of the present Conditions, if not paid for in full within One Calender Month from the day of sale."—Calcutta Courier, Sept 11.

We have received, by the Calcutta arrivals of the week, Bengal papers up to the 8th Sept., from which we make some extracts, which will be found in the Supplement, and from which it will be seen that 19,000 chests is the supply of Bengal Opium announced for the ensuing season. Letters of 7th ult. state that the exports of Opium up to that date were:—

To China	8,054	chests.
To Singapore	1,280	"
To Penang	422	"
To Batavia	93	"
	9,800	chests.

Patna was quoted at Co's. Rs. 1,280 and Benares, 1,185—nominal.

Freights to England, had advanced to £3.15 a £4 owing to the large operations in Sugar.

Exchange on London—6 mon. Bills—2s. 0¼d. a 2s. 1d. and Treasury Bills—1s. 9¾d. a 1s. 10d. ₹ Co's. Rupee.—Sing. Free Press 5th October.

A re-sale of Opium, consisting of Mr. Colvin's forfeited lots and the uncleared portion of the quantity assigned to the French Government, took place to-day. The quantity put up was two chests of Patna and 165 chests of Benares, together 202 chests, and though deposits or guaranty were lost (chiefly the former) to the amount of 10th Rs. per lot, were taken in the room from every buyer at the time of registering his purchase, the sale went off at prices fully equal to those of the day in the house, and we conceive higher considerably than the present aspect of the China market warrants the expectation of realising there The first lot of Patna was knocked down to the rich house of Leechmeerkand Radakissen at 1,165 Rs., which was the highest price, of the sale, the next lot being sold at 1160 and the 6th lot at 1130, the minimum; the average of the Patna Opium was Rs. 1140 per chest, while the Benares averaged Rs. 1068-1-7, ranging from 1065 to 1093 Rs. per chest. The public revenue realises by this sale 9,19,616 Rupees, which is rather better for the times, (and for "the poor army" too, whose pay is dependant upon the public revenue,) than if all this Opium had been burnt, as suggested by the Hurkaru last month.

The sale occupied more than two hours—about five times as much space as would have been required to get through the same number of chests under the old plan. The purchasers were all of a substantial class, the demand of deposits having had the effect of excluding the common buzzer herein, who usually speculate upon the chance of re-selling on the spot. We observed that the Government Officer who presided was furnished with a list of defaulters' names, but no person liable to rejection on that account offered himself as a bidder.

All the overdue Opium of the February sale was paid up yesterday. The amount, we are told, was about 10 lakhs.—Calcutta Courier 13th September.

From a Commercial letter dated Calcutta

13th September.

We have now the pleasure to inform you that the following scheme (assuming 10,000 Chests as the years supply) was suggested by the Board and referred by Government to our Chamber of Commerce viz.

1st. Sale,	1st. January.	2,000	Chests.
2d. "	1st. February,	2,000	"
3 1. "	1st. April,	2,000	"
4th "	1st. May,	2,000	"
5th. and last	1st. June,	2,000	"

The Committee of the Chamber, however, conceived the above plan could not afford sufficient opportunities for parties in England to avail of the Drafts as a means of investing funds here for remittance to China and therefore substituted the following in its stead viz.

1st. Sale,	1st. Monday in	January,	2,000
2nd. "	1st. Monday "	February,	2,000

with monthly sales of 2,000 Chests on the 1st Monday of each of the 3 succeeding months, making eight sales in all; but on the subject being afterwards discussed at a general meeting of the above body, the inconvenience and probable disadvantages to all parties of the above proposal (especially as regards the 2nd 3rd, 4th, and concluding sale) were probably brought to notice, and after a considerable opposition, the following resolutions of the Board's plan was carried by a majority, and has since been recommended for the adoption of Government, viz:

1st. Sale,	1st. Monday in	January	2,000 Chests
2d. "	1st. " "	February	2,000 "
3 1. "	2d. " "	April	2,000 "
4th. "	1st. " "	June	2,000 "
5th. "	2d. " "	July	2,000 "

a scheme likely, we think, to prove practically convenient for all parties interested. With regard to the mode of payment, the suggestions of the Board were unanimously approved of viz., a promissory note at sight to be taken in the sale room for the deposit which it is proposed to fix at 1,000 Rs. per Chest or 500 Rs. per Chest, and if not redeemed by the third, a resale to take place on the fourth day; and the balance of the purchase to be paid within the month, or a resale on the first monday following.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir.—All who are connected with the Interests of this port, will be glad to learn, that the commercial community have re-elected the members who composed the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce during the past year. The year's possession of office was scarcely sufficient to develope and to fix, so that the course might be a mere routine, the various objects, especially contemplated, to which their attention appears to have been directed. I would recommend to their notice, the subject of leases at once; the ground is barren and by entering on it, they would do more harm to their body, as well as confer a vast benefit on commerce. The facts which have been adduced of late years, relative to the duration of 999, have enabled many speculators to apply to them for the means of possibility, and so to construct edifices by which speculations on the ruins are made with a wonderful degree of certainty. The knowledge of life is a proverb: yet few adventurers are so rash in their leases or insurances on its duration; such indeed, would have grasped the law by which Providence, under given circumstances, guides the progress of it. When the importance of sea insurance to the wellbeing of commercial undertakings is considered, it is a matter of surprise, that no step has been taken to render the like aid to it Individual experience, or at the most that of a single community is at present, all which can be appealed to; hence it is that at different places various estimates are formed of the same risk; some the value, is onerous, at another, inadequate to give that return, which is derived from other branches of commerce. Great difficulties surround it, no doubt; so many are the contingencies to be accounted, in the collection of proper data but they do not appear insuperable to practical knowledge joined to patient attention. And although the first essay might not promise all that is required, still each fact is something gained, if it have the authority of a public record: let each fact, as it occurs, be properly tabulated, with all the attendant circumstances, and in a little while, we should see generalization attempted. If every loss was total, the task would be comparatively easy, but it is the valuation of partial losses, which forms the prominent obstacle. It might be met by recording each loss under certain fractional parts for, instance in sixteenths and upwards. Should the attempt be made at this port, it would be desirable to limit it in the first place, to voyages to and from Bombay, Madras and Calcutta, and to and from Great Britain. The tabulations hould be made for certain os seas, and, where the monsoon prevails, for each season. A record of the weather would be valuable: to effect this, a series of questions might be prepared and sent to every ship entering the port. But my purpose is not to enter in to details. I desire to draw attention to this important subject in the hope, that it will have the consideration of men capable of managing it.

I am
Sir,
Your obedient Servant.
Novr. 10 1837. "A STRANGER."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Mr. Editor,—The following advertisement, extracted from a late Paper, will give you some idea of the rapid march of intellect and progres of refinement in Great Britain. O tempora, o mores!: what would a stay maker of 1800 have said to such an effusion? In those simple times "Anton, Stay Maker, No. 21 New Bond Streeet.—N. B.—No connection with the stop over the way" would have marked the "domicile of madame"

Your's truly,
MIRATOR.

TO LADIES.—The Corset Perfectionné Sylphide (invented by Madame Saint Anton), from its peculiar scientific construction and pliability of material (divested nearly altogether of whalebone or steel), disposes with additional grace, dignity and elegance, the bust, waist, and tournure, producing a tout ensemble truly distingué, and diametrically opposed to the inelegant whalebound parody on woman's fair proportions. The general appearance of Ladies wearing this Corset undergoes so complete and felicitous a revolution (apparent even in trying on), as to create a new and happy era in their lives. Madame can, with the utmost confidence (resulting from the experience of many years), insure such perfect ease, comfort, and satisfaction, as cannot fail to be duly appreciated by all who are not insensible to admiration, or to whom the mirror's pleasing reflection can afford the slightest gratification. 21, New Bond-street, next door to Redmayne's, and directly opposite Messrs. Storr and Mortimer's. From the Age

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

"He was a man take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again."
Shakspeare.

Dear Mr. Editor,

The great and good of every age, and every nation, must, and ever will command universal esteem and admiration!

The following beautiful letter cannot be read without feelings of pride and gratification; it tells with dignity and simplicity the character of one of the best and worthiest of mankind.

His memory will be cherished by a grateful posterity, and held up as the most brilliant example of genuine patriotism, devoted zeal without ambition, greatness of mind allied to humility, and humanity blended with every good and manly quality.

I am, dear Mr. Editor
Canton, Novr. 5th 1837. CHRIS. BIDEN.

WASHINGTON TO LAFAYETTE.—Letter from Washington to Lafayette, on his resignation of the Presidency.—"Mount Vernon, Feb. 1, 1847.—At length, my dear Marquis, I am become a private citizen on the banks of the Potomac, and under the shadow of my own vine and figtree, free from the bustle of a camp and the busy scenes of public life. I am pleasing myself with those tranquil enjoyment of which the soldier, who is ever in pursuit of fame—he statesman, whose watchful days and sleepless nights are spent in devising schemes to promote the welfare of his own, perhaps the ruin of other countries, as if this globe was insufficient for us all, and the courtier, who is always watching the countenance of his prince, in hopes of catching a gracious smile, can have very little conception. I am not only retired from all public employments, but I am retiring within myself. I shall be able to resume the solitary walk, and tread the paths of private life with heartfelt satisfaction; envious of none, I am determined to be pleased with all, and this, my dear friend, being the order of my march, I will move gently down the stream of life until I sleep with my fathers . . . I thank you most sincerely, my dear Marquis, for your kind invitation to my house if I should come to Paris; at present I see but little prospect of such a voyage; the deranged situation of my private affairs during these few years will not only oblige me to suspend, but perhaps for ever hinder me from gratifying this wish. This not being the case with you, come with Madame Lafayette and view me in my domestic walks."—From he interesting Memoirs of Lafayette, just published, under the authority of his son.

"THE BETTER CURRENCY."—A market man at Lowell, Massachusetts, being, like every body else, bothered for change, has hit upon a new expedient. With his other marketables, he carries a basket from which he makes change in hens' eggs. Now, unless the Legislature, like some other wise bodies, shou'd enact a penalty for "asses" of so small a denomination, we don't see why the Lowell man will not get along very well. We don't know whether Mr. Benton has any objection to this kind of currency.—Gazette.

This "egg currency" is certainly "better," and of course more convenient, than that of some countries we wot of—Texas for instance. A gentleman in conversation with a citizen of that beautiful republic, some time since, asked him how they supplied themselves with a currency? "Oh," he replied, "we have money enough." "Ah," replied the inquisitor, "what kind of currency have you? Specie, of course—living so near the mines of Mexico?" Not at all, ;" said the other "We put in cows for large sums, and throw in the calves for change!"—American Paper.

From the above statement our readers will see which were the successful boats at the races run on Monday and Tuesday last, and it now remains for us to offer a few remarks on the occurrences of these two afternoons. The arrangements for the races by the committee were universally approved of, and particularly the site chosen for them which was the north branch of the river, about two miles distant from Canton, to which distance the absence of too great a number of Chinese spectators was no doubt owing; these were rather troublesome at the first races when the course was the Macao Passage, and the starting post in the immediate vecinity of the Canton shipping. The clerk of the weather too, it appears, had been obedient to the committee's orders, and to screen the pullers from the too intense curiosity of the sun took care to send his clouds and these remained stationary, only now and then, on the first day and before they were better schooled, shedding a tear of sympathy to such as were discomfited in the race. On the second day, habit no doubt had steeled them against too great sensitiveness, or, may be, they were kept in check by young Boreas, who had just arrived to assume his temporary government, but who, till the races were over, behaved with praiseworthy moderation. True it is that when the Company, assembled on the river, prepared to leave for town and a comfortable dinner, the young tyrant played several pranks which, however diverting they may have been to him, were not so to our Parsee neighbours, who, having hired several large flowerboats, in which to spend their time pleasantly, were driven by the god into a creek of the river, with threats to upset them if they dared to move, and he thus kept them there the whole night, playing his bassviol all the while about their ears. Every evil in this sublunary state will at length be swallowed by father time; thus it was with our friends; they were released from bondage by about 10 o'clock the next morning, when, shivering, they reached their Factories.

But to resume our task, that of giving a slight description of the races.

The first race between the Fanny and O. P. was won by the former in capital style, and a well pulled race by both boats.

The second, between the Flower O' Dumblane, Dame Blanche and Ariel, was won easy by the former, the two latter kept close company all the way.

The third between the Dragon and Queen of Trumps, the former in choice, both as to boat and crew, was a well contested race, and won by the Dragon.

The first race of the second day was between the Fly, Daisy and Thistle. The Fly was sculled by an amateur, who, we hear, had not sculled for a number of years, though from the handling of the sculls we think they have been familiar to him; seeing however his competitors take the lead, and mistaking also the turning boat, he soon gave over contesting the race. Up to the turning boat the pulling between the Thistle and Daisy was very even, the Thistle half a boat's length ahead, but on turning, the boats were locked together, and the Thistle lost one of her sculls, when the Daisy, getting clear, made the best of her advantage, having it all her own way on her return.

The second race on this day between the Ghost and Vixen (late Cow's Regatta) had been looked forward to with considerable anxiety, both boats being old favorites on the river; both the crews exerted themselves to the utmost, but from the very onset the Vixen took the lead, and continued improving her distance, winning easy by 30 seconds. It appeared to us that the Ghost would probaly have done better with a lighter crew.

For the race for boats of all classes only two started, the Ghost and the Not-so-green, the latter winning in capital style.

For the last race, for any class of boats and crews, again only two boats started, the O P. and the Alert, both pulled by British sailors. This was decidedly the best race of the meeting, the difference between the boats at any time being scarcely a boat's length; on arriving at the turning boat the O. P. had a slight advantage, but this was lost again after the turn had been effected, and they started again even, keeping close together, the O. P. winning by very little, so little indeed that many of the spectators at the time of the boats coming to the winning post, could not tell which was the winner.

Near the Umpires boat was stationed the very efficient band of music of the General Kyd which assisted not a little in keeping up the excitement and amusement of the two days, filling up the intervals between the races by national and popular airs, and saluting the winners with "a burst" as soon as the winning post was gained. We would give an account of how the Jardine cup was, by the Umpire, delivered to the winner, and of the address made on that occasion, only, having taken our station in one of the steward's boats, we were unfortunately no eye-witness of it: The Umpire's boat, on returning, was preceded by the band playing all the while.

Thus ended these races much to the satisfaction of the members of the club

On Saint Andrew's day another trial of skill and speed will take place between the Alert and the O. P. for we believe 250 $ a side; this race promises to be an interesting one.

CANTON PRESS,

18th November, 1837.

By the Sylph commercial advices to the 19th September have been received from Calcutta. Patna is quoted at 1,200 and Benares, 1000 Rs. Cotton, Bandа, 14, Jaloon, 12 8, and Cutchoura 11 @ 11 8. S.-R. Saltpetre 1st quality, 5.8, inferior 4 @ 5 S. R.

The quantity of Opium remaining in the Government Godowns was Patna, 3,786 and Benares 1,842 chests.

The Sylph brings on to China Patna 336, and Benares 245 chests, for the Straits 205 chests Benares. The Balgueris Patna 60. Benares 40. The Ariel Patna 215 Benares 145. The Antonio Pereira, Bombay, Premier and Thames were loading for China.

The next crop of Malwa Opium was estimated at 25,000 chests. The Lady Grant, advices say from Bombay 2nd September, was laid on for China, and expected to clear off all the old Opium remaining.

By the Sylph from Calcutta 19th September, and Singapore 17th October, we have, by private means, received the Sing. Free Press of 5th and 12th October, from which we give several extracts. We see that two Pirates found guilty, and sentenced to death at Calcutta, were executed at Singapore, whither they had been sent by the Supreme Government, that their punishment might more effectually act as a warning upon their neighbours. A Court of Judicature in the Straits with Admiralty Jurisdiction had at last been proclaimed in the Straits, and beneficial as such institution no doubt would be, we regret to observe from the Singapore papers that the Diana steamer, professedly sent to the Straits for the suppression of piracy, had been ordered to Moulmein, leaving the pirates as unmolested as ever to continue their depredations. Formerly, pirates, when caught, could not be punished, except at immense trouble and expense, and now, that this latter inconvenience is obviated, the means to bring pirates to justice are wanting.

The same papers likewise inform us, that after an existence of about 14 years, the Singapore Chronicle has closed it's career. The want of a sufficient number of subscribers at a reduced rate of subscription, and increased expenses, are stated as the causes of it's cessation. For many years, the Singapore Chronicle took a very respectable station among the India Press. It had at the beginning the support of Mr. Crawfurd, who in it published a great many interesting articles on the Indian Archipelago, and it has altogether contributed much towards diffusing a knowledge of the countries in the vicinity of the Straits, and of many of the thousands of Islands between them and New-Holland. This task now devolves on the Free Press alone. and we doubt not that that paper will acquit itself ably of it.

Our Cotemporary of the Singapore Free Press of 5th Oct., comments upon our remarks (Canton Press 5th August) upon a parcel of tin refused by the Chinese purchaser, on the alledged ground of inferiority or impurity of quality. Our remarks were called forth by a series of assays made at the Calcutta mint upon this refused tin, from which it appeared that, whilst Banca tin, and the Tin in small square pieces (corked hats) from which latter the slabs here refused had been smelted, contained only about 1 per cent alloy, all the other masters taken from the refused slabs contained as much as 3 a 4 per cent impurity or alloy. The only inference that could possibly be drawn from these premises was, that whilst smelting, the persons engaged in it, had committed a fraud by adding the alloy found in the tin by the Assay master of the Calcutta mint, nor do we see that we can possibly come to any other conclusion. Our Singapore cotemporary upon this observes that, if the people entrusted with the smelting of the tin had intended to be dishonest, it would have been much easier for them to have stolen the small square pieces of tin, instead of replacing their weight by lead or spelter, thereby of exposing themselves to double chance of detection. We must confess we do not see the force of this argument; by merely abstracting from the quantity of tin, they were certain of detection from the deficiency of weight, and it probably never entered their minds that two metals very similar in color, having once been mixed up by the process of smelting, could by means of chemistry again be completely divided, so as to lead to detection of their fraud—what means they had to hide the baser metals before mixing them with the tin we are of course unable to say, only it appears to us that the assay made at Calcutta clearly proves that such an adulteration was committed. In what degree tin in reality may be deteriorated by such small addition of other metal, we do not know, nor is it to the purpose here to investigate it. The facts of the case are that the chinese purchaser, who had contracted for the parcel at $ 28 per Picul, from the outward appearance of the slabs, objected to receive them, whilst his objections to the small square pieces, of part of which the refused slabs had been made, were overruled. The outward appearance and sound of tin, however deceptive this may be, determine the chinese purchaser as to the quality of the tin, and the metal, presenting an appearance different from such standard as, with respect to these qualities, the chinese have determined on, is, though in reality perhaps perfectly good, considered by them inferior. Now it appears to us perfectly possible and even probable that the small quantity of alloy found in the tin in question, may have injured it in the two qualifications esteemed by the chinese, and thereby rendered it a less marketable commodity. That however the chinese considered this deteriorated tin as only of a little more than half the value of that for which $ 28 were paid, will, upon further investigation, though at first sight it appears to have been the case, be found not to be the case. This tin had been sold at a very high price when the market was bare, to be delivered on arrival. Some delay, after the sale had been effected, took place in the delivery and subsequent discussion, whilst during this time new arrivals were daily coming, in, and prices rapidly declining, so that; when the delivery took place, the tin declared good, was probably not worth more than $ 21, if so much. The original purchaser declined to take the Tin at the $ 15, and the Hong merchant who acted merely as broker took it himself, and had it on hand for several months, ultimately selling it at from $ 14 a 15. The reluction submitted to therefore for inferiority in this case was not 12 but $ 6 per Picul, and the other part of the loss must be attributed to the fall of the market as explained to the shippers at the time. We intended at the time of our first remarks on the subject to have stated this, but did not then do it as thinking is foreign to the subject then under consideration.

We have been informed that when Capt. Scott of the Abercrombie Robinson, stated in his letter (Canton Press 28th October) that "an unarmed attempt" was made to obtain possession of the man, he meant to express that none of the officers or petty officers were armed for the occasion, and that they had orders not to use their side-arms, and when the chief-officer drew his sabre, he was ordered to put it up again.

The following is the latest Ediet against some of our foreign merchants, to which we alluded in our last—the preceding one will be found in another column, copied from the Repository. This sort of edicts have of late become so frequent, that very little importance seems to be attached to them by every body.

HOPPO'S EDICT.

WAN, Superintendent of maritime Customs at the Port of Canton, promoted twice, again raised two steps and recorded sixteen times, proclaims to the Hong merchants for their full information.

It is authenticated that orders have have before been issued to the Hong merchants to expel those traitorous resident barbarians Jardine &c., and to report on their departure for Macao that his Majesty might be furnished with the facts relating there to. But nevertheless they, the Hong merchants, have delayed taking any steps in the matter esteeming it as of no consequence. and up to this time, although many days have elapsed, they have not reported a single word on the subject. It is this perfectly evident that they are leaguing together to deceive me.

Now this matter having to be reported to the Emperor, I again issue an edict on the subject. Immediately on receipt of it let the Hong merchants proceed to put the former orders in force. Let them enquire into the reason why the resident traitorous barbarians, Jardine, Dent, Davis and Morrison * are still loitering here. Let them be immediately expelled and the day of their departure for Macao reported to me. Let there not be a moments delay.

Upon this subject I have received his Majesty's Commands directing me to manage the matter. You, the Hong merchants, must therefore exert yourselves and obey the laws. If I perceive the least connivance and vacillation in your conduct truly you alone shall be held responsible for the consequences.

Haste, Haste.—A special Edict.

November 8th, 1837.

* The translator of this paper gives the two last names, contrary to what other Chinese scholars make them to be. They are certainly not designed for Messrs. Morrison and Davis, but probably Messrs. Davidson and Matheson, being spelt differently from the manner in which the Chinese are accustomed to write these names.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES. Longcloths do not command the high price previously obtained the market being fully supplied, particularly with Greycloths, which are selling at nearly 1 Dollar under our quotation. Two or 3 weeks since, about 20,000 Pieces American cloths were sold at from @ 3 @ 4 per piece, we understand.

WOOLLENS.—Spanish stripes have been rather less in demand during the week: Longalls well assorted would sell for 24 @ 25. Camlets English, a large stock, and difficult of sale. Dutch almost unsaleable, the importations having been large.

COTTON YARN.—None but the best quality enquired for, and the demand is very limited at reduced prices.

COTTON.—Without improvement in price or demand, and a very large stock on hand.

METALS.—Lead is firmer. Iron in good demand from the limited supply, and we hear a parcel of railroad was sold within these few days a @ 4½ per Picul.

RICE.—No alteration in price, and sales are making at our low quotations.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—Pepper and Betelnut would command our quotations. Tin is without enquiry and declining.

COTTON.—Several considerable parcels of Bombay Cotton have been disposed of during the week at a decline of nearly 2 mace on the finer descriptions. Bengals on the contrary have maintained themselves, and fair Banda has been selling at 10.3 and fine Jalone at 10. the stock being very small.

OPIUM.—There was rather a brisk demand for small parcels of Patna in the early part of the week for delivery to the westward, and at an advance in price, but the arrival of the Sylph with about 600 Chests has rendered the quotations quite nominal, and we have heard of no transactions since. Malwa has continued very depressed, and sales have been made as low as 670 @ 675 $. The deliveries to the 15th were, Patna, new, 225; Benares, old, new 12; Malwa, 2292; Total 4301 Chests.

EXPORTS.

SILK MANUFACTURES.—Our quotations may, for the most part be considered as quite nominal, on transactions in silk piecegoods having taken place for several months back, and the owners consequently want employment. Probably orders may be executed somewhat under our prices.

RAW SILK.—Nothing doing hitherto in this article.

TEAS.—The market still unactive, the teamen not yet having settled the prices for their Congous.

FREIGHTS.—No ships have yet commenced loading for Europe, and no rate is yet fixed.

EXCHANGES.—On England quite nominal a 4s 6d On Bengal. Court of Directors and private bills are selling at 214 @ 215, but there are but few offering.

P. S. We just hear of the arrival of the Rajahstan, at Lintin on the 13th from Bombay 1st September, Singapore 9th October coming up the Palawan passage she experienced nothing but light winds.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.
IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures. Longcloths do not command the high prices previously obtained the market being fully supplied, particularly with Greycloths, which are selling at nearly 1 Dollar under our quotation. Two or 3 weeks since, about 20,000 Pieces American cloths were sold at from $ 3 @ 4 per piece, we understand.

Woollens.—Spanish stripes have been rather less in demand during the week. Longells [illegible] would sell for 9¾ @ 10. Camlets English, a large stock, and difficult of sale. Dutch almost unsaleable, the importations having been large.

Cotton Yarn.—None but the best quality enquired for, and the demand is very limited at reduced prices.

Cochineal.—Without improvement in price or demand, and a very large stock on hand.

Metals.—Lead is firmer. Iron in good demand from the limited supply, and we hear a parcel of nailrod was sold within these few days a $ 4.44 per Picul.

Rice.—No alteration in price, and sales are making at our low quotations.

Straits Produce.—Pepper and Betelnut would command our quotations. Tin is without enquiry and declining.

Cotton.—Several considerable parcels of Bombay Cotton have been disposed of during the week at a decline of nearly 2 mace on the finer descriptions. Bengals on the contrary have maintained themselves, and fair Bengals has been selling at 10.3 and fine Jaloun at 10. the stock being very small.

Opium.—There was rather a brisk demand for small parcels of Patna in the earlypart of the week for delivery to the eastward, and at an advance in price, but the arrival of the [illegible] with about 930 Chests has rendered the quotations quite nominal, and we have heard of no transactions since. Malwa has continued very depressed, and sales have been made as low as 460 @ 475 $. The deliveries to the 15th were, Patna, new, 615; Benares, old 2, new 12; Malwa, [illegible]; Total [illegible] Chests.

EXPORTS.

Silk Manufactures.—Our quotations may, for the most part be considered as quite nominal, no transactions in silk piecegoods having taken place for several months back, and the weavers consequently want employment. Probably orders may be executed somewhat under our prices.

Raw Silk.—Nothing doing hitherto in this article.

Tea.—The market still inactive, the tea men not having settled the prices for their Congous.

Freights.—No ships have yet commenced loading for Europe and no rate is yet fixed.

Exchanges.—On England quite nominal 4s 6d. On Bengal, Court of Directors and private bills are selling at 214 @ 215, but there are but few offering.

P. S. We just hear of the arrival of the Rajasthan at Lintin on the 15th, from Bombay 1st September, Singapore 9th October; coming up the Palawan passage she experienced nothing but light winds.

VOL. 3d. No. 12. CANTON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER, 25TH, 1837. No. 116.

DR. MORRISON'S CHINESE LIBRARY.

The following conversation occurred at a general meeting of the proprietors of the University college, London.

Mr. TOOKE, M. P., afterwards rose and spoke to the following effect:—While the ballot is proceeding, I avail myself of the opportunity to announce to the proprietors that the trustees of the late Dr. Morrison have taken into their consideration the claims of this college to that gentleman's library, inasmuch as he was a dissenter, and held opinions perfectly in accordance with the supporters of this institution. I have now the pleasure of informing you that they have chosen this college as the one to which they should present his library. I trust, and think it very probable, that there will be in consequence a great demand for the acquisition of the Chinese language, in which the books that compose the library are written.

Colonel LESLIE JONES asked whether the presentation were gratuitous?

Mr. TOOKE. It is perfectly so on the part of the trustees, except with this stipulation, that with the view of encouraging the study of the Chinese, a professorship of that language should be founded for a period of at least five years. That is the only stipulation. The library cost Dr. Morrison 27 years' labour, and he expended upwards of £2,000 in the acquisition of it.

Colonel L. JONES: As to the necessity of engaging a professor for five years, I think it ought to be considered whether the funds of the college at present justify such an expenditure. I say that it is not justifiable to appoint a professor of a language who will not, perhaps have a pupil for some time. If it be a gratuitous donation, I do not see why there should be this stipulation coupled with it. As soon as there was one scholar I would agree to the appointment, but until then I cannot. It will be necessary to give a professor at least a salary of £300 a year; and entailing on ourselves that expense for five years demands consideration before it is incurred.

Mr. TOOKE: I will set my friend at rest on the points of expense. The salary is fixed to a very much less sum than he has named, the largest amount would be £60 per annum.

W. A. HANKEY, Esq.: As one of the trustees of the late Dr. Morrison, in conjunction with Sir George Staunton and Mr. Wills, I think I am justified in speaking on the subject of this library and of its collector. Dr. Morrison, I need not say, is admitted to have been the greatest Chinese scholar that ever lived. He went out to India first under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, and, as a translator of the Scriptures into Chinese, succeeded the gentleman who was previously employed in such work. He was always distinguished for his zeal in propagating the Christian religion; and to do so more effectally, and to lay a stable foundation for it in China, he established a college at Malacca, which is still called the "Anglo-Chinese College." It has been established between twenty and thirty years, and at the present time it has nearly forty Chinese studying the various languages of the West. During the same period Dr. Morrison collected the library now referred to, and when, a few years ago, he obtained leave to visit this country for the benefit of his health, he brought it with him. This he did, that he might, if possible, make some arrangement with an English educational or literary body to become possessed of it, and to establish a Chinese professorship here. For this purpose he offered it to any college or institution which would, in return for the gift, found the desired professorship. He remained in England for about two years, but, not succeeding in his wishes, he left this library in the hands of myself and the other trustees, giving us power to sell it if any purchaser should offer. We accordingly attempted to dispose of it to several public institutions, but without success. At length an offer came from the Institute of France, which we communicated to Dr. Morrison, in order to hear his opinion on the subject. He, however, wrote back to say that he would not accept the offer, and that he did not wish the library to go out of England. Dr. Morrison died on his way to Canton, on his way thither in company with Lord Napier, in consequence of a cold he caught on the journey, which gave rise to a fever, and proved fatal. Having left his family without support, the trustees considered in what way they could dispose of the library to the best advantage, at the same time taking care to preserve in view the wishes of the collector. It was accordingly offered to government, and I was in correspondence with Lord Palmerston on the subject for some time. However, after a lapse of a long period, the Lords of the Treasury replied that they did not think that they should be justified in laying out the public money in the purchase of the library. The trustees then thought that it might be possible to effect their purpose by inviting a public subscription, so as to form an adequate compensation to the family of Dr. Morrison, and when that was done, to present the library to some institution which would carry into execution the design of the founder. That subscription has been made and closed, and now the trustees have the library at their disposal. Dr. Morrison married some years ago, and he has left five children behind him, all of whom are under the age of ten years. The trustees have, therefore, had continually to keep a twofold object in view;—first to make such provision for the family as to form an adequate compensation for giving away of the library; and, secondly, to comply with the wishes and complete the original design of Dr. Morrison. Not long ago a reproach was cast upon England, because she possessed no professor of the Chinese language; and I think it very remarkable, to say the least of it, that while France, Prussia, and most of the other countries of Europe afford facilities for the acquiring of the language, though they have little or no connection with China, England gives no opportunity of the kind, although she has such extensive trade and intercourse with that country. The present proposition for establishing a Chinese professor, will, if carried into execution, not only fulfil the collector's wishes, but will at the same time, renew England from a reproach which was but too well founded. The trustees have, therefore, complied with Dr. Morrison's patriotic desire, that the library should not leave England, by presenting it to this college, in choosing which for the purpose we have been influenced by the congeniality of the spirit of the institution with the character and feelings of the liberal-minded owner of the library. The books were collected during the period that Dr. Morrison was translating the Bible, and while he was forming a very compendious Chinese and English Lexicon. Such was the man who collected the library now offered to the college. I will now refer for a moment to the remarks made by Colonel Jones respecting the expense that will attend the proposed professorship. I feel great pleasure in stating that the attention paid to England in China would soon provide this country with a professor, if required, fully competent for the office. Under these circumstances, we now offer to the college the library, if it will agree to the terms laid down. I feel assured that, if accepted, the acquisition will do great honour to the institution. Upon such grounds no doubt the acceptance will meet with the approbation of every enlightened proprietor of this enlightened college.

Colonel JONES: I feel no objection whatever to the college accepting this library, nor to the appointment of a professor of Chinese, if the funds of the college are in a state to allow of it. What I object to is the holding out of false hopes to professors. Some members of the council, a short time since, exposed themselves to disputes and unpleasantnesses by promises of chairs to professors, which the college could not perform, or could not remunerate; on that account we got into dissension. Now the present project is brought forward, and what I wish to avoid is falling again into the same error, by appointing a teacher who would not have one pupil. That had been the case with another professor, who had not now a single student, after great expectations had been raised by his appointment. I speak of the Professor of Political Economy. I should not object to throw away hundreds of pounds in even an attempt to spread knowledge; but I do object to such a course being pursued now that the college is just emerging from all its difficulties, for I wish that no obstacle may be put in the way of its success.—The Morning Chronicle 23d. May.

SOCIETY FOR THE DIFFUSION OF USEFUL KNOWLEDGE IN CHINA.

The third annual meeting of this Society was held on Monday the 20th November. The gentlemen present were, Mr. Jardine, Mr. Turner, Mr. Matheson, the Revd. Mr. H. Malcolm, the Revd. Doctor Parker, the Revd. E. C. Bridgman, Mr. Moller, Mr. Slade and Mr. Morrison.

The meeting having been opened by Mr. Jardine as President, the secretary (Mr Morrison) read the report of the Committee.

It was then moved by Mr. Matheson, seconded by Mr. Moller, that the report just read be received.

The meeting next proceeded to take into consideration the question whether Mr. Gutzlaff's treatise in the Japanese language on the subject of international intercourse, could, consistently with the constitution of the Society, be considered within the scope of it's labours, when it was Moved by the Revd. Doctor Parker, seconded by Mr. Matheson,

"That whilst this Society is happy to hear of the existence of such a work in the Japanese language, it regrets that it does not come within the specific objects of the Society to publish it, as stated in the second regulation, the work being in the language of another nation."

In reference to the circulation of the Society's publications, it was moved by the Revd. Mr. Bridgman, seconded by Mr. Matheson, and carried unanimously

"That the Committee be directed to take efficient measures to circulate the publications of the Society, and, if necessary, to do so gratuitously."

On the motion of Doctor Parker, seconded by Mr. Moller, it was unanimously resolved that the officers for the ensuing year be as follows, the Secretaries being requested to continue their services as hitherto.

Mr. Turner, President; Mr. Matheson, Treasurer, Messrs. Green, Cox and Slade; Revd. Messrs. Bridgman, and Gutzlaff, Chinese Secretaries; Mr. Morrison, English Secretary.

It was then moved by Mr. Turner, seconded by Mr. Slade, and resolved,

"That the thanks of the Society be returned to the officers of the past year for their services."

The following is an abstract from the very interesting report read to the meeting by Mr. Morrison.

"Three years have already elapsed, since this society commenced its career, and still your committee have to advert to the inadequacy of their means for extending among the Chinese an acquaintance with the principles and phenomena of nature, and their applicabilities to the improvement of the past and present state of the many countries into which the world is divided, the majority of which are at present hardly known to them, even by name. Did any desire for such knowledge exist, the want of means for imparting it, would indeed, be source of regret far deeper than is now felt. Until however such a desire is excited, one work, calculated to arouse interest, is of much greater value than scores of works, unacceptable either from the style of writing, from the subjects treated of, or from the mode adopted in treating them. Some measure of unacceptableness on account of style must, for the present, attend all the publications of the society, they being necessarily tainted with foreign idioms, and adapted to foreign modes of thought and expression. Nor, if it is called to mind, that upon only three individuals has hitherto devolved the task of preparing works for publication, will it appear surprising that, amid the vast assemblage of subjects claiming attention, some should be selected that are not the most congenial to a Chinese mind; or that, where the subjects to be treated of, are so various, some should be handled in a manner not the utmost lucid or attractive. The considerations must of necessity induce those on whom it rests, to give effect to the wishes of the society, to pause, and carefully to ascertain their power ere they undertake so write on any subject, and to offer their writings for publication with no slight degree of hesitation.

"While they make these remarks, with the view of accounting for the smallness of the work that has yet been accomplished, your Committee at same time see no cause for discouragement. So long as they behold the efforts made by various institutions, for extending the benefits of education among the rising generation of the Chinese, and especially while they witness the judiciously devised and well directed labors of the Morrison Education Society, they feel assured that no long period will elapse before native coadjutors will rally around them, who will be not alone thoroughly grounded in the knowledge now possessed in the west, but will, at the same time, by intimate acquaintance with their own language, and the modes of thought of their own countrymen, be fully capacitated to diffuse that knowledge among all the sons of Han. In the meanwhile, it devolves upon us to stand in the gap and to maintain possession of the field of labour on which we desire that they should hereafter enter. But your Committee would suggest the enquiry, whether we cannot do more than this? whether we may not materially second the labors of the various educational institutions by the preparation of elementary treatises, in a simple and easy style for the use of those who are passing through a course of instruction. As surely a child will make advancement in knowledge more speedily through the medium of his own than that of a foreign language. When that foreign language is already acquired, and is no longer a subject of study, doubtless he should be referred to works in it for extending his information; but until then, we cannot view the foreign medium of communicating knowledge in any other light than as an impediment in the way of the desired acquisition.

"More clearly to ascertain what is the knowledge of which the Chinese stand in need, it will not be amiss to glean a few facts respecting the measure of knowledge which is already in their possession. At the first step, it must evidently appear, that in all that regards history and geography other than their own, a people so shrouded as they must necessarily have but very confused and inaccurate conceptions. And, though making every allowance for the obstacles arising from the wide extent and varying characteristics of the several regions which the Empire includes, it may yet be fairly presumed, that great deficiency is to be found in all that relates to those branches of knowledge most open to improvement, by the inter-communion of nations.

"The best means of obtaining a general view of existing Chinese literature, still probably be to run over the catalogue of works in the Imperial library at Peking, which we shall now very cursorily do. Adopting the Chinese arrangements, the grand departments are four, namely, classical writings, comprising chiefly Morals and Education; History including Geography; Professional writings; and Belles Lettres. The classical writings are subdivided into 9 sections. One of these is devoted to each of the five classics, and to works illustrating, and commenting on them. The subjects of these five are:—General Philosophy, as supposed to have been taught by Fu-hi, the reputed founder of the Chinese Empire. Political Philosophy as taught by the monarchs Yaou and Shun; political morals as taught by the popular voice in national songs and ballads; the propriety of conduct in the intercourse of social life; and the annals compiled by Confucius of his own native state. A sixth section is devoted to works illustrating an ancient treatise on filial piety, a seventh comprises all works illustrating the five classics as a whole. The remaining sections comprise works treating on the four books in which the instructions of Confucius and Mencius are recorded; works on music and it's harmonizing influences, and works on early education. Several of the classical works which form the foundation of this first department have already been translated into European languages, and from these we are enabled to judge that the most esteemed sages of China have not attained to much elevation in physiology.

"Under the second department, that of historical works, we have the national histories, compiled from public records of the ruling state, and histories drawn from them by private individuals; accounts of distinct events disconnected with the general course of history; histories of subject states; mixed histories; collections of official documents; memoirs of individuals; histories of independent states, such as Cochinchina and Corea; topographical and geographical works; memoirs of portions of the administration; lists of successive office bearers; books of reference &c. &c.; and lastly, critical investigations of history. The whole number of these sections is fifteen. Among these, with the exception of the tributary states, such as Cochinchina and Corea, the only works on foreign countries are found among geographical and topographical writings.

"Occasionally foreign countries are made the subject of a few concluding sections in works of general Topography, such as notices of bordering tribes in the description of frontier provinces, or of foreign trading nations visiting the seaports, where maritime provinces, such as Kwangtung and Fuh-kien are described. In the best general account of foreign countries contained in the concluding chapters of Ma-Twanlin, the information, limited to Asia, is very scanty, and the names even of many of the smaller Asiatic States cannot be recognised. But few books have been written referring solely to foreign countries.—(Here the Secretary gives a list of several of these books, which for want of space we omit.) Two of these works, which are considered among the best have been translated, one a memoir respecting Cambodja by M. Remusat, and another "Records of foreign regions" by Sir George Staunton. A review of these books enforces on us the conviction that the Chinese know nothing, except from hearsay, of foreign countries, with the exception of those in their immediate neighbourhood.

"The professional writings, which form the third department of Chinese literature, are arranged in fourteen sections. The first of these sections comprises the writings of the philosophers of the Confucian sect, the two latter the theology and exegesis of Budh and of the followers of Laou-keun, and several other works on philosophy are found in the tenth section among miscellaneous professional writings. The intermediate sections are occupied by works on military, legal, agricultural, medical astronomical, mathematical and metrological subjects, on the fine arts and on "collections" or "classifications." The twelfth section includes the drama, novels and romances. The eleventh several encyclopædical works.

"The last department of Chinese works is chiefly confined to elegant literature. It is divided into five sections. In the second are included many very valuable essays and narratives relating to a great variety of subjects.

"From this cursory review which we have taken of Chinese literature we are enabled to perceive what is the range of existing knowledge in this country. A philosophy, exclusively teaching the social relations between man and man, in this life, occupies a fourth part of it. Another fourth portion is taken up by history and geography almost exclusively national; With the exception of agriculture and weaving, the useful arts find no place in it. Mechanics and chemical sciences and anatomy thought of, and their medical knowledge are known to be little better than quackery. Astronomical and mathematical knowledge is chiefly derived from Europeans, and confined to a very few individuals, whilst astrology and divination find a place not only in their literature, but even in the arrangements of government. Being that so many are the defects of Chinese literature, it is our part to exert our utmost energies to supply their lack of knowledge.

"The Secretary then proceeded to state what had been done by the Committee during the year. He stated that progress had been made in the outline of the subjects the society had proposed to themselves. The View of "Universal History" is still in the press, but will, it is hoped, be very shortly published. The "History of the United States of America" is in part completed, and will probably be sent to press in the course of January or February next. A "History of England," the translation of which for printing which are already completed, has been presented by the President, and, after careful revision, will be published. A "History of the Jews" is in preparation. Little progress has been made in preparation of works on other subjects, though each department of knowledge, has, in some degree, been noticed in the Monthly Magazine, but no complete work has been undertaken with the exception of an "Introduction to universal geography." A small work on general geography, in the form of a travellers narrative, as also a short treatise on Astronomy of Gutzlaff, adopting the principal arguments used by Paley, both by the late Revd. Doctor Morrison, have been presented by the Secretary. These works will, after thorough revision, be sent to press.

"A small work in Japanese has been presented by the Revd. Mr Gutzlaff drawn up by him in concert with some Japanese living under his care, and the committee are desirous to have the opinion of the annual meeting whether the printing of such works, as not being in the Chinese language, are within the objects of the Society.

"Mr. Dyer at Malacca, and Mr. Panthier at Paris successfully continue their labours in constructing chinese to make metallic types. The committee have also had under consideration the propriety of making an application for the movable types prepared by the East India Company for printing Dr. Morrison's chinese Dictionary, which types remain still in this country. This application, it has been resolved, to be made, under an engagement of the Society towards the Company, that on those types being given up to the former, they will print a new work combining the Chinese and English languages, the Company may wish them to do, free of all other charges except the necessary charge for labor and materials.

"The last point, which it remained to the Committee to touch on, was regarding the distribution among the Chinese, of the books published by the Society. On account of the marks which they necessarily bear of foreign origin, they are liable to be discountenanced by this government, and natives will seldom be found willing to sell them. The committee therefore request that their successors for the following year be furnished with instructions how to act in reference to this important subject.

"After having taken a short notice of the financial state of the society, the Secretary concluded his report by alluding to the encouragement the study of the Chinese language had at last found in England by a professorship of it having lately been established in London. It was believed that the first appointment had been given to the Revd. Samuel Kidd, the Society's corresponding member.

HORSBURGH MONUMENT.

The following correspondence on the subject of the Horsburgh Sighthouse will be read with interest, as approving of the Coin on proposal of the manner in which the memory of this distinguished individual is to be honoured.

Cowper's, Cornhill London, 16th May, 1837.

Sir.—I am directed by the Committee of the East India and China Association to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December last, and the circular enclosed therein, proposing to erect by subscription a Lighthouse in Singapore Straits, in memory of the late Captain Horsburgh, to be called the Horsburgh Light—and I am to acquaint you that, although the funds of this Association were not raised in contemplation of objects of this nature, yet, considering the great and lasting services rendered to the trade of India by this eminent individual, the Committee will, in this instance, have great pleasure in recommending the subject to the favorable consideration of their next General Meeting.

I am,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
J STIKEMAN
Secretary.

Wm Havlett, Esq.
Hon. Secretary to the Committee for the erection of the Horsburgh Light. Canton.

Canton Register 21st November.

The following letter has been received per Rajasthan.

Bombay, 26th August 1837

To the Secretary to the Committee of the Friends of the late Captain Horsburgh, Canton.

Dear Sir,—I am directed by the Committee of the friends of the late Captain Horsburgh to Bombay to place myself in communication with you, and the Secretary of the Lond in Committee, for the purpose of ascertaining the mode in which you propose to apply the funds placed at your disposal with a view of co-operating in such general Scheme as may appear most likely to secure the object of subscribers, and to perpetuate the memory of our valued and lamented friend.

The amount of subscriptions here is about Rupees 5000 the greater part of which has been paid to the Treasurers, Messrs. Remington & Co.

With reference to the above of the Funds, I may observe that the Canton proposal of erecting Light Houses at Pedra Branca and other remarkable headlands in the Eastern Seas to bear the name of Horsburgh has met very general approbation here; but as very extensive means would be required to carry this scheme into effect, unanimity on the part of the different Committees would be indispensable to ensure success, and I know not how far this can be depended upon, not being yet aware of the intentions or proposals of our London friends.

In requesting such info mation as it may be in your power to give on this very important point, I am directed to assure you of the cordial co operation of the Bombay Committee in any scheme that may embrace the completion of such useful and permanent work as may ensure our united object, and do just honour to the memory of one to whom his country and the world are so deeply indebted I remain.

Dear Sir,
Your Obedt. Servant,
J. P. FAWCETT.
Hon. Sec. to the Bombay Committee.

MONEY MARKET.

London 27th June.

The Money market has been again marked by tranquility, and has presented but little variation from our last report. The Death of the King has been the only political occurrence calculated at all to affect it, and that event produced but little effect on the quotations of public securities: still it has indisposed parties for business, by directing attention to the occurrences which grow out of it, and by awakening speculation and anxiety as it regards the future government of the country. The proclamation of the young Queen in the city, in which the civic authorities took a conspicuous part, and which was more than usually attended by persons of all descriptions, took place on Wednesday. The Funds continued steady at 91¼ for Consols. On Thursday the Bank Directors, at their usual weekly meeting, decided to advance money for three months on the acceptances of the suspended American Houses, taking the responsibility of the parties who held the acceptances as a guarantee for repayment. This decision liberated a great number who were previously bound. Such a decision caused considerable satisfaction here, and will doubtless do the same in the country and in the United States when it becomes known. This was the whole of the result of a further investigation of the affairs of the suspended houses on the part of the Bank, which appears to have again been forced on the Bank by their decision in reference to the firm of Brown & Co, of Liverpool. The public do not yet know the exact arrangement between the Bank and this last house, and neither the Bank nor the house have at present made it known. A knowledge of such arrangement is much wished, and it is said that it would be for the interest of the house itself to be communicative on the subject. After this determination of the Bank became public, Consols rose to 91¾ Account. Exchequer Bills were then quoted at 33 and Bank Stock at 204½ Still the operations in English Securities continued to a narrow extent only.

Money has been more scarce, and the number of bills in circulation has been very small. No particular variation in the rates of discount has occurred.

We have been without any fresh fai ures in either town or country; still commercial matters are in a very precarious state, and great distrust continues. The very serious decline which has taken place in the prices of goods necessarily creates fear, and nobody that understands matters, feels in any way confident that we have got through our troubles. An impression prevails, and that justly, that the disorder is very deeply seated, and the effect produced by any little favorable circumstances for the better soon settles down again to the low level of former depression. The system adopted by the late East India Company of hypothecating goods, which system has been carried to the extent of two or three millions in Tea, Java and Silk, prevents many houses in the East India trade from sinking under the pressure of the time, and will prevent them from passing through that fiery ordeal to which the American houses have been subjected. Every prop is now of great value, and will be until there are signs of things taking a turn, which they doubtless must do, and will do. Until that anxiously wished for turn arrives, assistance and supp rt will be in constant requisition.—London Mercantile, Journal 27th June.

EMBASSIES TO CHINA.

From the Correspondence between the India and China Association and the British Government, which we published on the 28th Octover last, it will be seen that the Association, in recommending an Embassy to be sent to Pekin, give it as their opinion that the Ambassador should "not be precluded from performing the ceremonies required at the Court of Pekin," in other words that he should perform the ceremony hitherto resisted by British Embassies to Peking, and knock head, or go through the Kotou, and thereby do homage to the Emperor of China as the Superior of his King. We are led to offer a few remarks on this subject, seeing that it will this day occupy the attention of the Committee of our Chamber of Commerce, as communicated to it's members by circular. The great importance which the Chinese seem ever to have attached to the performance of the prostrations, shews that they consider them as a very important affair, and it's omission would imply that all earthly power, as the Chinese fondly and vainly assume, did not emanate from the "Central Kingdom" and that the "Son of Heaven" did acknowledge his equals on earth. We do not think that it is at all well to humour a nation, so fond of boasting, and which affects to look upon all, without the pale of their country, as barbarians, and infinitely inferior to them, in these conceits whenever a political connexion with it should become desirable. Great Britain should only treat with China as an equal, and alone in maintaining that position can she ever hope to derive any advantage from Embassies to Peking. We certainly do not agree with the East India and China Association, that an Embassy should at all be sent; we do not see that the present state of affairs, such at least as at the time known in England, calls for one, and experience has shewn us of how very little use either those sent by England, or Portugal, Russia and Holland have been. The Embassies generally spent their time in Peking in vain and humiliating ceremonials, whilst the business for which the far journey had at immense expense, been undertaken was invariably avoided by the Chinese. That at the present day an Embassy would meet with better success, we see no reason to suppose. The Chinese will affect to consider the Ambassador again as tribute bearer, come to do homage to their Emperor, and assume the Embassy to be one of mere compliment. Let us take a short view of the treatment the different Embassies met with.

The first mission we find recorded was Portuguese, that of Tomé Pires, who in 1520, set out, as Ljungstedt informs us, from Macao in rowing vessels, adorned with portuguese flags and silken awnings, "os mente por honra deste reino levava as bandeiras com armas e devisa de elle." M. Ljungstedt translates this "he carried for the honor of the country it's armorial ensigns," this is a loose translation in which by "the country" either China or Portugal may be understood, whilst it is evident that the Portuguese writer meant to say, Chinese ensigns, and these probably denoted the Portuguese Ambassador as bearin Kung or tribute to the Emperor, in the same terms that gave such offence to some of the members of Lord Amherst's Embassy, and similar probably to the fla s that floated over Lord Macartney's boat, though of the characters on them we have no translation. Pires arrived at Peking, but the Rajah of Malacca having complained to the Emperor, of having been deprived of his country by the Portuguese, the Chinese Government demanded that the Portuguese should give up the conquered land. Pires was not admitted to an audience, but treated as a spy, kept in prison at Canton during two years, and then executed.

In 1668 another Portuguese Embassy was sent to Pekin, at the head of which was Emanuel de Saldanha in a boat "qui portait banderole avec cette inscription "c'est homme vient pour rendre hommage." This embassy had to perform the usual Kotou in Pekin, but in spite of this the Macao people were so little pleased with the result of this expensive embassy, that they requested the king of Portugal "not to intercede with the Emperor in behalf of his vassals at Macao, were it not in an imperious and cogent case."

This imperious and cogent case had presented itself on the expulsion from China in 1743, by the Emperor Yung-ching, of all Christians, and we accordingly find another portuguese Embassy, under Alexander Metello de Souza e Menezes leave Macao for Peking in 1726, for the ostensible purpose of congratulating the Emperor on his accession to the throne. This Embassador performed the Ko tou, but made not the slightest progress in the real objects of the Embassy.

The last Portuguese Mission was in 1753, when Francis Xavier Pacheco e Sampaya was sent to Peking, to complain of the oppression the Portuguese suffered under in Macao by the Chinese Mandarins. The Ko-tou was again performed, and again without the Portuguese deriving the slightest benefit from this humiliation, though it cost the town of Macao 20,000 Taels.

When Czar Peter in 1720 sent an Embassador, Leoff Vasilevitz Ismaeloff, the Ko-tou was performed, and several years after a commercial treaty was entered into between Russia and China, but this more in consequence of the continual disturbances on the frontiers of the two Empires, than of any diplomatic success of this Embassy.

The Dutch Embassy, under M. van Braam in 1795, though they not only performed the Ko-tou before the Emperor in person, but were well exercised in it, to the no doubt great delight of the chinese officers, in their houses at Pekin, whenever a message was sent from the Emperor, gained nothing whatever by the repeated humiliations they had to suffer.

The long discussions that Lord Macartney had with the Chinese authorities on his mission in 1793, as to the performance of the Ko-tou, were at last ended by a sort of honorable compromise, of bowing to the Emperor so many times; these bows were performed by the no le Ambassador and profound were they, that the Chinese mistook them for prostrations, and have it on their records that he did perform the Ko-tou, this at least they assert. It is well known that that Embassy had no favorable results whatever.

Lord Amherst in 1816 was denied the Imperial presence, after having agreed on the mode of salutation with the Chinese officers, and returned from Peking without his mission having had any result, though it cost the Company 80 000 £. Though Lord Amherst was prepared to resist the performance of the Kotou, it is amusing to observe that on the journey to Pekin, he, in presence of high Chinese officers, instructed his son how to perform the Chinese ceremonial.

We see therefore that of the Embassies hitherto sent by different nations, all, with the exception of the only English one that was admitted to an audience, have performed the humiliating ceremony of the Ko-tou, and that none of them have met with the slightest success in the objects for the attainment of which they had been sent.

From the performance of the Ko-tou therefore no advantage has been derived, it must, on the contrary, have greatly flattered and augmented the pride of the Peking government. If therefore any English Embassy be again sent, we hope that the Ko-tou will not be performed, and the expediency of sending Embassies at all appears very doubtful, if we are allowed to judge of the future by the past, so long at least as we shall have no very decided cause of just complaint.

The following requisition has been made to H. M. Superintendent, and Capt. Elliot has, in consequence, appointed a meeting of British subjects to be held at the hall of his office on Monday next the 27th November.

To Captain Charles Elliot, R. N.
Her Majesty's Chief Superintendent of British Trade in China.

Sir,—We, the undersigned request that you will convene a public meeting for the purpose of drawing up an Address to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen of Great Britain on her accession to the Throne, expressive of the loyalty of Her Majesty's dutiful subjects in China.

We have the honor to be Sir,

Canton, 18th Nov. 1837. Your most obedt. Servts.

At a general meeting of the General Chamber of Commerce, held on Wednesday the 22d November, for the purpose of taking into consideration the proposal of the Committee to alter some of the fundamental laws of the Chamber, in consequence of the whole of the Committee of last year having been re-elected, and the Committee deeming it necessary to prevent the recurrence of such a result at any future election, they being unanimously of opinion that it is of vital importance to the success of the Chamber that on these occasions there should be an infusion of, at least, some new members.

Mr. Dent stated that it had been the determination of one of the members to have declined serving another year, claiming exemption in terms of Rule 8, but that he had waived his disinclination in deference to the other members, who, in consideration of the election having been general thought themselves bound to accept the trust the Chamber had again canferred upon them.

It was then moved by Mr. Cragg, seconded by Mr. Starkey, and carried nem. con. that rule 8 in the printed regulations should be cancelled, and the following substituted.

Rule 8. The annual General Meeting for the purpose of electing the Committee shall be held on the first Monday in November, when the members then in office shall go out, but with the following exceptions shall be liable to serve again, if re elected, the exceptions being

1 English member
1 American "
1 Parsee "

whose period of consecutive service had been the longest, or if more than one has served an equal period, to be determined by lot at the meeting of the Committee, immediately preceding the election and

1 the member representing any nation making 6 members who shall not be re-eligible. Nor after being on the Committee for two years in succession, and giving notice to the Secretary, one day before the election, of unwillingness to serve longer, shall it be compulsory on any outgoing members to take office for a third year. *

And that Rule 19 shall be altered by substituting the word "lot" for the word "ballot" in the second line. †

* The following are the old rules now superceded.

8 The annual General meeting for the purpose of electing the Committee shall be held on the first Monday in November, and six members of the former Committee shall go out annually by lot, but be eligible to be re-elected; and in any new members the proportion of each nation shall be maintained, but it shall not be compulsory on a member to serve two years consecutively on the Committee if re-elected.

† 19 The Committee of arbitration shall be elected by ballot every two weeks but their power shall be continued so long as business brought before them shall be undecided.

An incidental conversation took place on a motion past by the last meeting of the committee with reference to a letter addressed by the East India and China Association of London to the British Government on the subject of East India Company's Finance operations in China, which received the unanimous approval of the present meeting.

The following is the resolution referred to as passed at the meeting of the committee.

"It was moved by Mr. Maclean, and seconded by Mr. Matheson, that an early communication be made from this Chamber to the East India and China Association of London, with reference to a letter dated 27th February 1837 addressed by that body to Lord Palmerston, soliciting the continuance of their best exertions with the British authorities, to have the H. Company's Finance Agency at Canton discontinued, as prejudicial in its effect and operation to the commercial interests of Canton—which was carried and unanimously agreed to."

It was also moved by Mr. Matheson and seconded by Mr. Dent, with reference to a similar letter of the Association, dated 29th June, 1836 that the Committee at the next meeting shall take into consideration the effect likely to be produced on our commercial relations with China from the performance of Ko-tau or Chinese court ceremony by foreign Embassadors at Pekin.

South America, The Princess Luise, from Callao, 21st August, brings the intelligence that the Chilian troops, on being ordered to march upon Peru, mutinied and killed their General and President Portales. The Chilian Republic has by the death of this man lost a ruler, to whom it no doubt owes the great wealth and prosperity it has enjoyed, as compared to many of the other South American Republics. No letters from Valparaiso seem to have been brought by the Princess Luise.

We have had two arrivals direct from England during this week, the Eliza Stewart from London 4th June, and the American Ship Superior, from Liverpool 9th July. The latter vessel brings commercial advices to the 6th July, according to which confidence began to be somewhat restored, but the demand for produce was as slack as ever, and we have not the slightest improvement in prices to record, as regards Chinese exports. From our extract from the London Mercantile Journal of 27th June, it will be seen that the Bank was giving it's assurance in consequence of which some pressure in the money market had been relieved. Much must depend upon accounts and remittances from America. Generally speaking, no disposition was evinced to enter on commercial speculation; people were watching the events without a more active share in them than compelled to. The approaching election was the all absorbing theme, and exertions ing business had drawn many of the influential monied people out of town.

The Revd. Mr. G. H. Vachell, Chaplain to H. M. Commission in China, has informed the Public by Circular, that Divine service is now performed by him every Sunday afternoon in the Hall of the office of H. M. Superintendents.

Hingtae's affairs, of which nothing now is heard, seem to be as distant from a satisfactory settlement as ever. An investigation of the other Hong-merchants affairs by the local government is on foot, and the Hong-merchants have informed the foreign merchants that they have been required by the Governor to give in to him a true statement of the amounts they are indebted to foreigners.

The subject of the smuggling ships still engrosses the attention of the Governor and other officers of the local Government, and we would again lay before our readers the translation of a Chop against the outside fleet at Lintin, but could not obtain it in time for the press. From this document it appears that the Chinese threaten with a stoppage of the trade if the "store ships" do not leave the Lintin anchorage within a month. So many have there lately been of similar documents, that this new one does not seem to have excited much attention. Whether all these denunciations on the part of the Chinese Government are intended eventually to be enforced, as far at least as they can do so, is impossible to say, but the Canton authorities at least appear to be serious in their efforts to prevent Opium from their successful efforts in this river, where they have all but entirely stopped the trade. At Lintin the deliveries for some months have not averaged 1000 chests, whilst the production of the drug is so rapidly increasing in India, that, to get rid of the calculated amount to be brought into the market next season, the deliveries in China must equal 3100 chests at least. Only 7 years ago the consumption of the years 1829-30, was 14 000 chests in all, now, we are expected to get rid of three times that quantity. Ten years further back the whole consumption in one year did not exceed 4,997 chests, or about a tithe of what the Chinese ought now to consume.

As will be seen from an advertisement in our paper, the E. I. Company's Finance Committee are now ready to advance on shipments of teas and silk to England, but at the rate of 4s. 7d., per Dollar, the same exchange at which last year's advances were made. Such as prices in Europe now are, we do not see that any produce, shipped from here, paid for with dollars bought at 4s. 7d., is likely to give the speculator any profit, and this circumstances leads us to hope that the applications for the advance will be but few, and that purchases of produce will thereby not be much accelerated. Under the present circumstances, in order to put the Chinese trade on a healthy footing, it is very necessary that the prices of the principal exports, Tea and Silk, should be so much reduced, as to promise at least a saving remittance at the latest quotations from England. The stocks there of both these articles continued heavy, nor do the commercial advices received from thence promise any very speedy return of that spirit for speculation which had so greatly enhanced the value of most articles something more than a year ago. The Chinese have however hitherto not lowered their demands sufficiently, and we therefore rejoice to see the Company's treasury open, at a rate to the shipper that will probably deter him from making too liberal a use of it.

NOTICE.—Is hereby given that the Honorable Company's Agents are ready to receive bonafide tenders for Advances on Bills of Exchange, secured by consignments to England of Tea and Nanking Raw Silk, in the manner prescribed in a paper entitled, "Terms and Conditions for making Advances in China," at the rate of Four Shillings and Seven pence (4s. 7d.) per Spanish Dollar.

Until further notice, Payments will be made in Cash.

(Signed.) J. H. ASTELL.
H. M. CLARKE.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—Several considerable sales of LONGCLOTHS were effected during the week, particularly of Grays which are taken off freely at our quotations, no heavy supplies having yet arrived. COTTON YARN. The stock is large of the lower Nos. and inferior quality, which description is without enquiry; there is some little demand for better sort. Nos. 26 @ 36.

WOOLLENS.—In consequence of the fresh importations, SPANISH STRIPES have rather declined, and the demand is languid; the same applies to LONGELLS, but the stocks being moderate, and the supplies, from all appearance, likely to fall short, an improvement may be expected. CAMBLETS, both Dutch and English, are without demand, the market being overstocked.

METALS.—IRON continues firm with a disposition to advance, unless checked by large importations. LEAD may be quoted fully $ ¼ higher in consequence of speculative demand from the short supply.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—Without alteration, there being none in first hands.

COTTON.—There have been no importations of any description since our last, but the market is very inactive both in demand and deliveries, and purchasers can with difficulty dispose of their parcels at previous rates.

OPIUM.—The regular trade being still interrupted without the slightest symptoms of any relaxation, the only deliveries continue to be to the Eastward and in the neighbourhood of Macao. Malwa has, in consequence, still further declined, and the price of Patna and Benares quite nominal, and by the next importation they must both fall considerably. The Lintin deliveries to the 22d were Patna, new, 279; Benares, new, 29; Malwa, 531¼; Total 819¼ Chests.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—No further accession to the stock, which is said not to exceed 3500 bales, and nothing yet doing in it.

TEA.—None of the black tea-men have settled the price of their Pekoe Keoks at the same rates as fixed by the merchants at the beginning of the week, and most of them have, we believe, since come to terms. A few chops have been weighed off, but none yet shipped. Nothing done in other descriptions.

EXCHANGE ON LONDON.—The Company's Agents have this day notified their rate for advances on shipments to England, which is 4s 7d per $, payable in Cash.

VOL. 3d. No. 13. CANTON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER, 2ND, 1837. No. 117.

THE DAYAKS OF BORNEO.

A member of the American Mission who has lately returned from Borneo, having favoured us with a few notes of a visit to a campong of Dayaks situated in the interior of Sambas district, we have condensed them for insertion in our columns, trusting that any information regarding that country and so peculiar a race of savages will prove interesting to our readers.

Our correspondent commenced his expedition by proceeding up the Sambas river in a small covered boat which served for cook house, dining-room and dormitory, there being no houses on the banks where a trading-vessel could lodge at, and on the 14th June last, arrived at Ledo, which is distant about four day's journey from the Dutch residency of Sambas. On the way crowds of monkeys chattered over head, and swarms of musketoes infested the boat. Sometimes the beating of Dayak gongs gave note that the head of some fellow being was perhaps being severed from its trunk, and that some dismal festivity was being carried on over the butchered remains. On going ashore at Ledo, our correspondent found several Dayaks whom a few kind words inspired with courage and they approached and examined his clothing with great minuteness, not being able to conceive why a person should require more than one covering. The Malays also were unable to comprehend the object of his wishing to visit the Dayaks, the pure and simple motive of doing good to our fellow-creatures, being totally beyond their ideas. Our correspondent called on the Pangeran who holds immediate jurisdiction over the Dayaks he wished to visit, and while in "the presence" a Dayak evidently in great trouble, came to have a grievance redressed. He stated that in a recent head hunting expedition he had been unsuccessful, while others of the company had taken three heads :—he being one of the headmen of the campong, his wife was highly offended with him, the disgrace being more than she could endure, or his kind attentions to her could wipe away. The Mahomedan rajah coldly dismissed the complainant, by saying that the matter was of very little consequence, and the wife was at liberty to choose a younger husband! On the following day (12th June) our correspondent proceeded to Lomar, the path lying along the course of a small stream that found its way among the hills, and the muddy water of which gave evident token that the cupidity of gold miners was actively at work in the neighbourhood. Sometimes the way led thro' valleys, the luxuriant vegetation of which manifested what productive spots they might become under the hand of cultivation. Sometimes hills were ascended, the acclivities of which would have been nearly inaccessible, but for the steps which the Chinese had cut, and which from the nature of the clay, had become nearly as hard as stone. Sometimes the path was found dug along a precipitous bank, with earth and rocks impending from above, while the waters of the river were rolling far below, and into which a single false step would have precipitated the traveller, unless he happened to be lodged in his fall in the top of some tall tree. Anon the path lay through a thick wood which shielded it from the meridian sun, and then opened into a once cultivated but now deserted plain; exposing the pedestrian to all the strength of his piercing rays. Then diversified with hill and dale, sun-shine and shade, the course was far from being monotonous;—and the prospect was equally varied, for on all sides were seen rising in the distance mountains of various shapes and sizes, covered with verdure to the very top; nearer still could be traced the courses of several streams as they wound their way among the hills, and here and there extensive plains were observable which had been once cultivated but were now left to return to their original wildness, presenting a striking picture of the moral desolation with which the inhabitants of this lovely region are enveloped.

In several places were seen huts built in the tops of trees;—in these the Dayaks sit, while watching their little rice fields. Perhaps from this circumstance has arisen the erroneous opinion that there is a race of Dayaks who live altogether in trees.

Early on the 13th the party left Lomar, the course lay ng close by several gold mines worked by Chinese, and along canals or channels in which water is conveyed to the mines. The operation of working these is simply as follows: A channel is first dug, which conducts the water from some stream to the place to be excavated, care being taken to allow the water to pass thro' the mine from above, so as to produce a rapid current. From the mine to a considerable distance below, the channel is walled up with stones, poles &c., so as to prevent the precious metal being wasted or lost. The sand or gravel is then dug out of the mine and thrown into the channel, while several men are stationed in order to agitate the water, for the purpose of loosening the gravel or sand, and also, with a kind of skimmer made of rattan, take out the stones, allowing the sand, with which the particles of gold are mixed, to settle at the bottom. Until the operation of separating the gold from the sand takes place, which is usually done four times a year, the mines must be watched day and night. The process of separating the gold is, to take a portion of the sand and wash it in a kind of scoop, until it is all carried off by the action of the water, leaving the gold in the cavity of the vessel. The metal is then taken to the captain or headman who applies a magnet, in order to take out any particles of iron that may be there; after this it is carefully weighed and packed up for market. The captain takes possession of all the gold that is collected, supplying the workmen with provisions, and once a quarter paying every man his share. At such times he makes a feast, killing more or less swine, according to the amount of profit. The pork is first offered to their peculiar deity as an acknowledgment of his favor, and is then eaten by the company. This scene usually closes with indulgence in opium smoking and gambling, except by those who are too drunk to enjoy themselves in either of these vices. The Chinese generally live with Dayak women, who with their children are in general decently clothed. Whenever our correspondent passed their huts, women and children would come out in swarms to gaze at the stranger, he being probably the first white man the yhad ever seen.

Around one of the mines there were probably more than a hundred Dayaks searching for gold. They do not work in mines, these being the exclusive property of the Chinese, but they glean around and get what they can, which is very little. Those Dayaks who are under Malayan rule are severely taxed, and in return are allowed the privilege of merely living—those who reside in the vicinity of the gold mines pay an additional sum. The Dayaks living near Lomar, and amounting to about a hundred families, pay annually to the several pangerans who claim authority over them, something more than 20 tile, or about 5 lbs. 4 oz. of gold, worth there about 2 drs. * the tile, which is actually more than the whole amount of property the greater number of them possess. Besides this they are compelled to the vexatious duties of carrying the pangerans from place to place, and of supplying them with provisions so long as they remain in the neighbourhood, and all without the least remuneration. Again there are several of these chiefs who claim the right of carrying on a forced trade with these poor savag s compelling them to take in exchange for their commodities, articles at about four or five times above their value, whether required by them or not. Our benevolent correspondent called the company together on one occasion in order to preach to them—but they were so anxious to collect something wherewith to satisfy the demands of their tyrant masters that they seemed to care for little else. As they collected together one brought a stone he was pounding up—another his scoop full of sand &c.—and all with their knives, used for decapitation, by their sides, and baskets on their backs. Such was the appearance of the first Dayak congregation at Lomar!

(To be concluded in our next.)

THE DUKE OF SUSSEX AND THE JULIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SINGAPORE FREE PRESS.

Dear Sir,

As your paper is of very extensive circulation, and I may come to the notice of my friends before my letters reach India, where as in England, I have many who will read one paragraph in your last, with painful interest, I mean that respecting the accident of the Julia; I beg the favour of your correcting your statement of it.

The accident was not occasioned by a "heavy squall," nor is the sentence "came in collision" exactly applicable to it, as "collision" when applied to such accidents commonly implies that two ships were sailing and met together, which was not the case here; the Julia was luside the Carimons lying to under her topsails, on the starboard tack with her head (N. E by E.) South East by East, the wind about (S. by W.) South by West, when the Duke of Sussex under full sail run stem on to her lee or larboard bow. The following is an extract from the Julia's Logbook.

"At 3 A. M. Hazy over the land, in top-gallant sail and jib; furled main-sail and hauled the fore-sail up snug. At 3· 30' squally from the southward with rain, hove the ship to with her head to the N. E. wind about S. by W.—during the squall lowered the topsails on the cap and kept the lead going. Saw a ship under fail about two points on the lee bow (larboard) immediately showed our light (a patent signal lamp)—strange ship drawing near and steering wild—hailed her constantly with speaking trumpet. She stood into us, still carrying sail with a strong breeze, and about 4. A. M. she run stem on to us and struck us on our lee or larboard bow, carrying away our foremast and making a wreck of us forward. Lost two of our petty officers, one seacunnie and one lascar overboard, and one seacunnie killed on board. Strange ship passed clear of us without hailing our ship—careened over to windward and supposing her to be going down, instantly hailed the strange hips to let go his anchor —no reply heard—immediately cleared away our boats and sounded the well, kept the boat out in search of the lost men without effect—fired minute guns and showed a triangular light (N. B. while the strange ship was foul of us our best bower anchor run down and afterwards brought us up in 17, seventeen fathoms water.)

"After daylight saw a large ship coming up from the westward with her jib-boom gone—came up with us and sent a boat on board of us and proved to be the "Duke of Sussex." The Captain, chief officer, and surgeon came on board, and left us while we were clearing away the wreck. The Bark "Ariel" Capt Warden, bore down to us and sent an officer on board to offer assistance (in the Duke of Sussex's boat, together with chief officer of that ship). We proposed that the Duke of Sussex should take us in tow. The Commander of the Sussex came on board, and agreed to tow us and gave the assistance of three or four of his men. We slipped our chain, leaving our wrecked spars fast to it as a buoy. The Duke of sussex took us in tow. The wind falialing light to the westward of the Coney, the Sussex cut the tow rope, leaving us "to do the best we could." We worked in to anchorage and brought up at 10 P. M. in 10 fathoms.

The above, Sir, is from the Julia's Log-Book as given on the following day to a Notary Public; it is not extracted with the intention of implying blame, but chiefly to obviate the very unfavorable impression I find made against those on board the Julia, by your merely stating the ships "come in collision," as it is commonly supposed that the Duke of Sussex being bound here, was standing to the eastward, which was not the case. This will fall into the hands of many of my nautical friends, and I beg the favour of your inserting it as it is. I acknowledge and feel grateful for the kindness shewn in sending the Surgeon on board, altho' to late. These accidents happen to the best and most skilful men, but as a seaman I fully expected the ship that struck us would, when clear of us, have hove too, anchored, or lowered boats, to inquire into the fate of those she run on board of, instead of running out of sight till daylight.

I am Sir,
Your obliged and obedient Servant,
R. RICHARDS.

* The weight of the tile seems to be overrated, or every Dayak would have to pay an annual tax of more than $ 700 in value, and not $ 10 only as the writer states. ED. C. P.

We regret to state that the Glenelg (in ballast) on entering the Singapore Straits from the China Sea, through the Great Inner Channel, on Monday morning last, about 7 o'clock A. M., struck on a rock, having at the time the following bearings per Asiamuth compass (which was ready on the poop when the vessel struck) namely:—Barbaret Hill W. by N. and Pedra Branca, S. E. by E. a large 1½ S. She only remained on the rock from 5 to 10 minutes, having succeeded in boxing her off with the head yards; but notwithstanding, she has sustained considerable injury, as four pumps constantly going were unable to keep her free. Unfortunately, baffling winds and calms prevented her getting to anchor in the Roads before 2 o'clock A. M. the following morning. Her own and other boats were sent to Singapore, and signals being made and guns fired, assistance was promptly afforded from the shore and from some of the vessels in the Harbour. Every exertion is now being made, as recommended by a survey report, to heave down for the purpose of being repaired.—Singapore Free Press 26th October.

SCIENTIFIC EXPEDITIONS.—In the Supplement of our December number we gave the outline of an expedition to be sent by the United States, into the Pacific, on scientific purposes; and for some time past we have heard rumours of another voyage round the world by the French. The fact was at length posted, as our readers will see by the following sketch of its projected route.

The king of the French has, by a decision of the 26th of March, approved of a proposal for a new voyage round the world, the conducting of which is to be confided to M. Dumont D'Urville. Two vessels will be employed in this expedition; the Astrolabe, commanded by Captain D'Urville, and the Zelee, by Captain Jacquinot. These vessels will sail from Toulon about the beginning of September, and touching at Cape Verde will proceed due south into the polar sea between the meridians of the Sandwich Islands and South Shetland, to pursue Weddel's track, who, it will be remembered, reached the lat. of 74 15'. The vessels will penetrate as far south as possible, and return to Magellan Strait, where ample work is yet left in the examination of the numerous sounds and inlets in the adjacent archipelago of islands. From hence the vessels will proceed to Chiloe, and thence to Valparaiso, to refit &c. In the spring of 1838 they will depart from Valparaiso for the Polynesian Archipelago, and in June will be at Vavao, where M. D'Urville will finish the work left undone by the Astrolabe in 1827. Banks Islands, to the north of the New Hebrides, and Van Icoro will next be visited, and afterwards the Salomon islands, from whence, if the state of the vessels and crews permit, M. D'Urville will pass through Torres Straits and visit the new Dutch colony on the river D'Ourgas, Aroo and Key Islands, and thence proceed to Amboine. It is intended the Zelee shall then return to France, bringing with her the collections made. The Astrolabe will pursue her voyage towards New Holland, and in the latter part of 1838 will be at Swan River. She will go thence to Hobart Town and New Zealand, and make a careful survey of Cook's strait. She then proceeds to Chatham island and continues northward to the Caroline islands, afterwards to Madanao, Borneo and Sumatra, and will then return to France by Cape of Good Hope. We look on this as a most interesting expedition, and one that will yield important results. We cannot, however, but regret to see so extensive and important an island as New Guinea, left year after year in its original neglected condition, with but little addition to its coasts since the time of Dampier. Nautical Magazine for May.

ACCOUNT OF THE CONQUEST OF THE MIOU-TSE.

Concluded from Canton Press No. 7.

In the advanced court are posted the elephants belonging to the crown, with their gilt howdas, and at their side are the war-chariots; the grand music and instruments are on the two sides of the gallery terminating the north Court, where the Emperor is seated on his throne. The tribunal of rites had fixed the ceremony at 7 o'clock in the morning; the Emperor countermanded this, and ordered it to begin at half past four. As soon as the great bell of Peking was heard to strike, every body was seen hastening to the Palace, and this assemblage of princes, grandees, tribunals and troops was all arranged according to the orders of the tribunal of rites.

The Emperor appeared on his throne amidst music and the beating of the most noisy instruments, and, after having received homage and felicitations, a Mandarin of the Empire called out aloud: "Your Officers who have brought hither the prisoners advances: prostrate yourselves, Ko-tow." After this ceremony, the same Mandarin again called out aloud. "You, Mandarins of the military board, and you, officers, come and present your captives."

The unfortunate Surveng, his younger brother, his General in Chief, the younger brother of Seng-ko-sang, and three other men of rank of Kin-choang, appeared at a distance before the Emperor and this august assembly; they all had a white silken chord tied round the neck; they advanced a few steps when they were ordered to kneel. Near them was placed, in a cage, the head of Seng-ko-sang; behind them were 100 officers; on their right fifty, partly Mandarins, partly soldiers of the Peking Government; on their left were fifty officers of the board of Princes. Seeing those preparations calculated to strike the prisoners, with terror Sur-vengs General in Chief could not help manifesting his contempt, which was however observed only by those nearest to him, he prostrated himself and beat the ground with his forehead, like the rest of the prisoners; after which they were conducted into some adjacent room. The Emperor then again received the congratulations of his subjects, and retired under the sound of music and gongs, banting, without having decided on the fate of his illustrious captives; but it was soon known that they were lost.

The Emperor immediately after went to a palace named Gi-tay, which nearly touches our house. The instruments for torture were all exposed to view in a large hall; the Emperor sat down on a small throne. What must have been the surprise of the unfortunate Surveng and his fellow captive's at these preparations Surveng's General then addressed the Emperor: "Sire, the King, father of Surveng, on his death bed, confided him to my charge. He still is a young prince incapable of acting for himself; it was I who had committed on the war, if in this I have sinned, it is I alone who am guilty, and who alone deserve to be punished; spare the young prince who cannot have been guilty." He spoke in vain. One word or sign from the Emperor, and they were all put on the rack; in the midst of the tortures they confessed what had augmented them; Surveng, as it was said, continued to have tortured Wang-tsh during 100 days, at the end of which he had killed him himself by a thousand; others say that he confessed having poisoned Wang-tsh in a dish expressed to eat, and then was dying of him. The Minister continued to have killed Ta-hwo-fuh, the Emperor's son in law.

Surveng and the other six prisoners, after having suffered the most excruciating tortures, were placed on carts, with gags in their mouths, and in this painful and humiliating state they were taken to the place of execution, where they were tied to posts and cut to pieces, as rebels, at about 11 o'clock of the morning; their heads were afterwards put into cages, with their names etc., affixed to them; on the following days bloody executions of Mandarins of lower rank took place. Of the whole of this unfortunate nation there remains now only a few of the lowest, who have been given as slaves to the victorious officers. *

SAINT ANDREW'S DAY.

The sons of Saint Andrew feasted themselves and friends on Thursday last, at the hall of H. B. M. Superintendents, which had been kindly given up for the occasion. Rather more than one hundred persons sat down to a plenteous dinner, Mr. Jardine in the chair, grace having been said by the Revd. Dr. Parker. After removal of the cloth, the following toasts were given in succession from the chair: The pious memory of St. Andrew. The Queen, drank with enthusiastic cheers. Queen Adelaide and the rest of the Royal family, in silence. The Army and Navy. The host's health. From the Vice-chair. The memory of Wallace and Bruce. By Mr. Lowrie: The union of Scotland. By Mr. Robertson: Messrs. Assell and Clarke. From the chair: The Kirk of Scotland. By Capt. Elliot: The Chairman. By Mr. Assell: Mrs. Hunter and the Ladies at Macao. By Mr. Innes: Auntie and our American guests. From the chair: Lord Elgin and his companion's late maritime services. Lieut. Com. Scott: The Rose, the Shamrock, and the Thistle. By Mr. Robinson: the Vice-chair. By Mr. Lowrie: the Stewards. All the toasts were well received, and the dinner went off in the best possible manner to the great satisfaction of those present, the enjoyments of the evening being prolonged until a late or rather early hour of the morning. Much praise is due to the stewards for the arrangements. So numerous a party has never sat down to dinner in Canton before.

Such house having been shown to Scotland's patron saint, we may take this opportunity of contributing our share, by giving the following account of one of the Saint's successful exploits, which we find in Hone's every day book.

There is a marvellous pleasant story in the "Golden Legend," of a bishop that loved St. Andrew, and worshipped him above all other saints, and remembered him every day, and said prayers in honour of God and St. Andrew, insomuch that the devil spitefully determined to do him mischief. Wherefore, on a certain day, the devil trans ormed himself "in to the fourme of a ryght fayre woman," and came to the bishop's palace, and desired in that "fourme" to confess to him. When the bishop was informed of the message, he answered that she should go and confess herself to his "penytauncer," who had power from him to hear confessions. Thereupon she sent the bishop word, that she would not reveal the secrets of her confession to any but himself; therefore the bishop commanded her to be brought to him. Whereupon, being in his presence, she told him, that her father was a mighty king, who had purposed to give her to a prince in marriage, but that having devoted herself to piety, she refused, and that her father had constrained her so much, that she must either have consented to his will, or suffered divers torments; wherefore she chose to live in exile, and had lived cruelly away to the bishop, of a very holy life that had heard, and with whom she now prayed to him in secret contemplation. "And anchoress she evyll parylles of this present lyfe." Then the bishop marvelled greatly, as well for the nobility of her descent, as for the beauty of her person, and said, chosen thee an house, "and I wyll that thou dyne with me this day;" and she answered that evil suspicion might come thereof, and the splendour of his retinue be thereby inspired. To this the bishop replied, that there would be many others present, therefore there could be no such suspicion. Then the devil aimed with the bishop, who did not know him, but admired him as a fair lady, to whom therefore the bishop paid so much attention, that the devil perceived his advantage, and began to increase in beauty more and more; and more and more the bishop marvelled at the exceeding loveliness before him, and did homage thereto, and conceived greater affection than a bishop should. Then a pilgrim smote at the bishop's gate, and though he knocked hard they could not open the door; then the pilgrim at the gate knocked louder, and the bishop grew less charitable and more polite, and asked the beautiful creature before him, whether it was her pleasure that the pilgrim should enter; and she desired that a question should be put to the pilgrim, which, if he could answer, he should be received, and if he could not, he should abide without as not worthy to come in. And the company assented thereto, and the bishop said, none of them were so able to propose the question as the lady, because in fair speaking and wisdom she surpassed them all. Then she required that it should be demanded of the pilgrim, which is the greatest marvel in the smallest space that ever God made? And then the bishop's messenger propounded the question to the pilgrim, who answered, that it was the diversity and excellence of the faces of men, because from the beginning of the world there are not two men whose faces were lyke, and semblaate in all thynges:" and the company declared that his was a very good answer to the question. Then she said, that to prove the further knowledge of the pilgrim, he ought to be asked what, being of the earth, is higher than all the heaven: and the pilgrim answered, the body of Jesus Christ, which is in the imperial heaven, is of earth's flesh, and is more high than all the heaven; and by this answer they were again surprised, and marvellously praised the pilgrim's wisdom. Then she desired that a third question might be asked of the pilgrim, which if he could answer, then he would be worthy to be received at the bishop's table; and by her order, the messenger demanded this question of the pilgrim, "What is the distance from the bottomless pit unto the imperial heaven?" and the pilgrim answered "Go to him that sent thee to me, and ask the question of him for he can better answer it, because he measured this distance when he fell from heaven into the bottomless pit, and I never measured it:" and when the messenger heard this, he was sore afraid, and fearfully told the pilgrim's message to the bishop and all the others who, when they heard the same, were also sore afraid. Then forthwith the devil vanished away from before their eyes; and the bishop repented, and sent the messenger to bring in the pilgrim, but he could not be found. So the bishop assembled the people and told them what had happened, and required them to pray that it might be revealed who this pilgrim was, that had delivered him from so great peril: and the same night it was revealed to the bishop, that it was St. Andrew who had put himself into the habit of a pilgrim for the bishop's deliverance. "Then began the bishop more and more to have devocyon and remembrance of saynt Andrewe than he hadde before."

At Duddingston, distant from Edinburgh a little more than a mile, many opulent citizens resort in the summer months to solace themselves over one of the ancient homely dishes of Scotland, for which the place has been long celebrated, singed sheep's heads boiled or baked. The frequent use of this solace, in that village, is supposed to have arisen from the practice of slaughtering the sheep fed on the neighbouring hill for the market, removing the carcases to town, and leaving the head, &c. to be consumed in the place.† Brand adds, that "singed sheep's heads are borne in the procession before the Scots in London, on St. Andrew's day."

EDICT AGAINST THE OPIUM AT LINTIN.

Translated by Mr. Morrison.

From the governor and lieut-governor, allowing a period of one month for the departure of the opium-receiving ships. Dated 20th of November, 1837.

Tung, governor of Kwangtung and Kwangse and Ke, lieut-governor of Kwangtung, issue their orders to the senior hong merchants, for their full information.

Having before received a despatch from the council of state, communicating an imperial edict which had been respectfully received, on the subject of driving away the opium-receiving ships.—we, the governor and lieutenant-governor, have already given particular orders on this subject. We prescribed a period, and commanded the said merchants to joint it earnestly and impressively on the superintendent Elliot, that he should require the receiving ships to take their departure. So long a time as two months have now elapsed, and those receiving ships remain still at anchor, as before. And, the said superintendent, having plainly represented to us, that the commands so enjoined could not be brought by him to the knowledge of his king, we also directed the civil and military authorities of the department of Kwangchow to make a copy of our enjoin commands, and to enjoin the same on the said superintendent, that, in obedience thereto, he might with speed send away the receiving ships, and require every one of them to depart and return to their country; also, that he might make it known to his king, in order that their return may for the future be interdicted. This is on record.

Now, it appears, from the several successive reports and examinations of the commander of the Taping squadron, the naval and civil authorities of the district of Heängshan, and the sub-prefect residing at Macao, that the various receiving ships have not yet taken their departure. This is a gross act of contumacy and contempt.

We have now again received the following imperial edict.

"Tung and his colleagues have presented a memorial, in reference to measures taken for driving away the receiving ships, and to regulations determined on for apprehending and punishing the brokers and smugglers of opium. It appears from this memorial, that the receiving ships and cargo-laden ships of the English and other nations have, of late years, under pretext of taking shelter from the weather, been in the practice of entering the inner seas. Commands have now been issued to the hong merchants to be by them enjoined on the superintendent of affairs of the said nation, requiring that all the receiving ships, anchored off Lintin and other places, be sent away and ordered by him to return to their country; and that they be not allowed as before to remain lingering at anchor. The senior hong merchants have also been commanded, as soon as the receiving ships start to return to their country, immediately to report the circumstance, that it may be authentically ascertained by examination. The class of 'fast-crab boats' has been completely swept away; but there are yet many smuggling boats under various other designations. These, as well as the depraved gang of brokers, it is indeed impossible to suffer to continue their unrestrained courses. The military officers of the circuits and departments, and all the vice-admirals and commanders of squadrons, have therefore been directed to set an example to all their subordinates, and to keep up to a constant and unbroken guard, for the purpose of discovering and apprehending the guilty.

"The anchorage of foreign ships in the inner seas, and there combining with natives to introduce what is contraband, are the most aggravated evils now existing in the province of Kwangtung. The governor and his colleagues, aforesaid, must faithfully and strictly make examination, and clearly ascertain, whether since they have issued these orders, the said foreign superintendent has or has not paid obedience to them, and whether the receiving ships have or have not taken their departure; they must require the ships one and all to return to their country; and must not suffer them to linger for a moment. If they dare to suffer gradual encroachment, and to let the matter rest, at a future day, when I the emperor on inquiry here of it, or am by any one informed thereof, the said governor and his colleagues alone will I hold responsible. In regard to the various classes of smuggling vessels, it is still more important that measures should be adopted with strictness to make seizure of them, with the hope that they may be utterly destroyed and rooted up. Nor must they, when perchance they have made a few seizures forthwith declare that they have entirely succeeded in removing them, and so still occasion a continuance of the evil. Respect this."

It is our duty immediately to pay respectful obedience to this, and to issue orders commanding the obedience of others. We, therefore, forthwith issue these commands. When they reach the said superintendent Elliot, that he likewise may obey the same. He must, within the space of one month, pay respectful obedience to the declared imperial pleasure, by sending off the various receiving ships anchored in the outer seas, requiring them one and all to return to their country; and he must report their departure for our official investigation, that we may report the same to the throne. If they dare again, in any measure to linger, then, the kindness and tenderness of the celestial empire having been carried to the utmost, and there being no room left for additional favor, it will remain only to display the celestial terrors, and to make apparent the glory of the established laws. We have to report plainly to the great emperor, that the merchants ships my be denied permission to open their holds, and that grasping the laws, we may pu sue with them the receiving ships. And further, seeing that the said superintendent, in the discharge of his official duties, sits bound, idly looking on at the unrestrained and illegal practices of depraved foreigners, even kicking against our commands, and resisting the imperial pleasure, we shall find it difficult to believe that he is not guilty of the offense of sheltering and giving license to these illegalities. We will assurredly proceed to expel him, and drive him back to his country.

We, he governor and lieut-governor, will in the maintenance of the laws, stand firm as the hills, and of a surety will show no indulgence. The said senior merchants are men to whom the imperial pleasure has allotted the duty of conducting forth this matter. If then, they cannot, within the stated period guide and instruct these foreigners in the path of duty, so that the various receiving ships continue to look around them to view the course of events and to remove far off the day of their departure in that case they shall also be degraded, and their offences shall be visited with severity. Tremble at this—intensely—intensely. A special order.

Taoukwang 17th year 10th month, 23d day.

SHIPPING ON THE EASTCOAST.

The following Edict from the Admiral was left on board of one of the ships on the Eastcoast.

"By Imperial appointment { Chin admiral of the Fokien Fleet &c. and Yew vice admiral commanding the Kiangsu squadron &c.

again issue an edict to the barbarian Ships for their information and obedience.

It must be perfectly manifest and clear to you that I, the admiral, have always treated you with the most intense benevolence. My heart has ever inclined towards you with cherishing kindness and compassionate tenderness.

Some time ago I issued an edict commanding you to sail away to the southward and return to Canton that you might thus avoid the necessity of my resorting to arms to drive you out. I could not bear to sacrifice your lives without any warning, so I determined first to try what effect words would have on you, and then, failing these, to resort to arms. But you the barbarians are truly obstinately stupid, your daring to presume to request permission to trade with natives which you state was in former years the custom and that your cargoes consist of caulets broad cloths &c., all of which are legal articles. By thus petitioning me you manifestly disregard my warnings and edicts and are bent on resisting and defying me.

I ask you, do you expect to make large profits, and that traitorous wretches from the shore will assist you in the disposal of your goods? If the admiral have anchored my ships in every corner who then will dare to trade with you? Even if you presume to anchor your small vessels in shore and there wait for opportunities to smuggle, you will not be able to carry your schemes into execution You will not succeed in one single instance.

Now the laws of our heavenly dynasty are clear on this point. Your ships are allowed to trade at the Port of Canton but they must not go to any other Port. Even if, as you say your cargo consists of Camlets and Broadcloths, still you must not bring them here for sale.

In the 7th moon of the present year His Excellency our Governor presented a clear report to the great Emperor, stating that he had driven your ships away to Canton, and of his having forbidden you to act as in former years coming and going at will

The traitor She who was apprehended in the streets of Ya how confessed on his examination to having been concerned with the barbarians and was accordingly punished with the utmost severity. This well teach the traitors inland to look after their own safety and avoid communicating or trading with you.

The whole expanse of these waters is now covered with civil and military officers and the ships are thick as the stars in heaven. In every corner they will watch and seize. It you expect to trade as in former years, you labor in vain for it; it is now impossible.

I, the admiral, have received orders from His Excellency the Governor to assemble my fleet and drive you out of the waters. If you listen to my orders I will treat you with forbearance; but if you resist me I will exert my awe inspiring power and exterminate you As a proof of my forbearing intentions I now issue this edict for your information ere resorting to force.

If in return for this forbearance you defy me, thus madly indulging yourselves with extravagant hopes, I, the admiral, must stop your wicked and rash purposes. Each day that you remain, I also will remain. Moreover I will assemble the whole of the Kin-ka fleet, and then will try which of us is weak and which strong and whether you will obey or resist me.

Now you have only two ships one of which is in a different port, When your ammunition and powder are all consumed, they will not be able to assist you with fresh supplies: then too late will you repent.

I now again issue an edict for your information, you must really obey the laws of the heavenly dynasty, and accord some respect to the different officers appointed by his Majesty. Each officer has fixed duties to perform, and these duties are determined by the laws, not one iota of which must be disobeyed. If you return immediately to Canton, you will act exceedingly proper, but if you do not, I truly can no longer treat you with the least kindness or forbearance, but will order my vessels to burn your ships and wherever they see you, to open a thundering fire on you.

You cannot say that my country does not treat you from afar with the most cherishing tenderness. You can now choose whether to be cherished or whether exterminated.

If after receipt of this Edict you still remain obstinately disobedient, truly I will issue no more.

Tremblingly obey.—A special Edict Sept. 29th.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Mr. Editor,—The aspect of affairs in Canton at present for British interests appears as bad as is in the recollection of one who has been 11 years a resident, and our situation is so far more desperate than before, in as far as we now have arrived at this unfortunate knowledge viz "that the Government of England are utterly ignorant of our situation!" "or of the means to mend it;" and with our views of an approach to help before them they disbelieve them. Moreover, those we had (from mutual interest) a right to call our friends, the Indian and Chinese association with Mr. Larpent at their head, have utterly given up and sacrificed our interests; of course also from ignorance! therefore, Sir, I address you as a drowning man does hold to a hair, not with a just hope of success but in despair!

As to the foreign office represented by My Lord Palmerston, his 2d SLAVE sent here goes tomorrow, and we, in our petition years since, represented to him the imprudence of sending any one here on such terms; but his Lordship is not contented with one nobleman's broken heart, he must also have another officer of her Majesty's Navy insulted and ill used—and for no earthly benefit.

For our friends over whom Mr. Larpent presides, I some times feel sorrow! but oftener indignation!! They fancy in England what they can and do know more of Chinamen than us, resident years and years in it. Let us try them by their acts: they recommend, in direct contradiction to our wishes, the H. E. I. Co's. Finance Committee advances, they in face of every warning succeed and after their own purses (and some here also) have been very well emptied, cry out "we have sinned, forgive us"!! Now in their address to my Lord Palmerston, conveying in their wisdom what is wanted in China, and flying in the face of every practical man's advice resident here, Mr. Larpent's meeting recommends the Ko-Tow! being performed by an accredited ambassador of the Sovereign of England to the Chinese Emperor!

Now, were that ambassador the flower of our English nobility (the Duke of Wellington himself) I would say, I would sooner see his head struck off by a sword, than that he should perform the Ko-Tow for the English crown to China! and I speak advisedly when I say that this is the unanimous feeling of British traders here, and not for knightly high tone, but because such proceeding would not be beneficial to their interest.

On this subject, as on the H. Co's. Finance Committee, I do not yet doubt to see Mr. Larpent's Committee come round to the opinion of us residents, but I hope they will do so in time to prevent so much misery and suffering as the Finance committee has created, and that in the face of every warning!

Your's.

Canton 7th December 1837. DELTA.

CANTON PRESS,

2nd December, 1837.

Our arrivals during the week have been many. By the Marquis Camden we have received Singap. Papers of the 26th Octbr. and 2d November, and our extracts from them will shew the extent of damage sustained by the Jupiter in her encounter with the Duke of Sussex, and that the Glenelg was injured on a rock in the Straits of Singapore. Many vessels had left Singapore previous to the Marquis of Camden, but few have yet arrived here.

The edict against the shipping at Lintin, mention of which was made in our last, will now be found in our columns, as likewise one from the Admiral of the Foh-keen station of a not very recent date. From the former will be seen that a stoppage of all trade is threatened, if the Opium ships do not go away. It is impossible to say whether or not the Chinese have any intention of acting up to their threats, or whether it is a more ruse de guerre concocted between the Hoppo and some of the merchants to hasten the shipment of produce for the Europe market.

A party of 25 or 30 gentlemen went on Thursday last to the Citygate to present the following representation to the Governor. The Quangheep made his appearance soon after the arrival of the party, when the letter was delivered to him.

To His Excellency,

The Governor of the two Kwang Provinces a respectful address, &c. &c.

Not having had any communication from the Cohong since we replied to their very unreasonable proposition to pay the debts of the Hing-tae hong in 15 years, we are compelled again to address your Excellency and trust in pressing our claims upon your notice we shall not be considered as unnecessarily troublesome

In thus urging a settlement we cannot but allude to the announcement made by your Excellency in conjunction with His Excellency the Foo-yuen that our trade may be stopped within a month and our nation's representative expelled; and are now come once more to your Excellency in the hope that you will grant us that justice which the laws of China in such cases have hitherto given Foreigners, and prevent the adop ion of any other measures.

We entreat an early answer from your Excellency to enable us to communicate the result to H. M. Superintendent

We have the honor to be
&c. &c.
Signed by the foreign Creditors of the Hing-tae Hong.

A public meeting of British Residents was held at the hall of the office of H. M's. Superintendents, Capt. Elliot R. N. in the chair, for the purpose of drawing up an address to Her most Gracious Majesty the Queen of Great Britain on her accession to the throne, expressive of the loyralty of Her Majesty's dutiful subjects in China. The meeting was numerously attended, and Capt. Elliot opened the business on which they had met in a very able and eloquent address; after which a Committe of six Gentlemen having been appointed to draw up an address, these retired for a few minutes, when the following was proposed, and agreed to, and is now at the Superintendent's office for signature, having already 57 names to it.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLAT MAJESTY.

We your Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects now resident in Canton in the Empire of China, beg most respectfully to tender at your Majesty's feet, the expression of our condolence upon the loss which your Majesty and the nation have sustained by the demise of our lategr acious sovereign.

Impressed with the deepp earnestness of far distant men, we humbly and fervently pray to Almighty God that your Majesty's reign, so auspiciously commenced, may be long and glorious, and that the name of your Majesty may be associated to the end of all time with things religious, enlighteped and humane.

(Signed by the British residing at Canton.)

Capt. Elliot sent the following circular round, informing the British of Canton that, owing to the denial of the Vice-Roy to communicate with him, in the manner pointed out to the Superintendent by his Government, he is obliged to leave Canton. The British residents here have signed a paper circulated for the purpose, stating their intention of assembling to see Capt. Elliot depart, which is we believe, to take place this day, in order to mark their approval of this step, and to shew to the Chinese the respect in which the British here hold their own authorities. We are glad that Capt. Elliot has at last taken this step, which would have been unnecessary had he never come to Canton, a proceeding to which the Superintendent was probably prompted, by his wish to be useful to the community, but which we, at the time, thought any thing but politic. Whether however in this Capt Elliot acted up on his own responsibility or merely followed orders from his Government, it is but justice to him to say that he was ever found ready, during his short stay among us, to give his advice and assistance where required, and our small community loses by his departure a personally much esteemed member of our society. After Capt. Elliot's departure the British flag will again be hauled down, until further instructions, we presume, from home.

To,

THE BRITISH SUBJECTS RESIDENT AT CANTON.

Canton, 29th November, 1837.

GENTLEMEN,

I have recently had the honor to receive Instructions from Her Majesty's Government directing me to make a communication to the Governor of these Provinces, concerning the manner of my intercourse with His Excellency.

The Governor has declined to accede to the conditions involved in these Instructions, and whilst these difficulties subsist, all communication between us has necessarily ceased.

In this posture of circumstances I can only assure you, Gentlemen, of my sincere disposition to afford you any public assistance in my power, either in the form of counsel or in any other way which may be consistent with my situation.

Neither can I conclude this letter without respectfully and earnestly suggesting to you the expediency of taking this occasion to draw from the Provincial Government a definite explanation of it's intentions with relation to your claims against the Hing-tae Hong: claims, it will be remembered which have been examined and certified in strict conformity with arrangements, required and sanctioned by this Government.

It seems to me to be an object of considerable importance to the general interests of the Trade that my report to Her Majesty's Government, detailing the interruption of the Public communications, should be accompanied by a statement of your own position in respect to these particular claims.

I will only detain you, Gentlemen, to offer you the expression of my best thanks for the courtesy and consideration which I have always received at your hands.

I have the honor to be Gentlemen.
Your most obedient humble Servant.
CHARLES ELLIOT.
Chief Superintendent.

N. B. OF IMPORTS ALL DUTIES ARE PAID BY THE PURCHASER, AND OF EXPORTS BY THE SELLER BOATHIRE IS PAID BY THE SELLER.

NOTE. Opium can only be delivered at Lintin &c. where also higher prices are obtainable for Camblets, Saltpetre, Ginseng and other Goods, on which the duties at Whampoa are high.—Ships with Rice, Cotton &c. sometimes discharge at Macao or tranship their Cargoes, at Lintin &c. to other Vessels, bound to Whampoa, and thereby avoid Port Charges. The ship rents outside, and River Freights, are various and high.—Small invoices of Wine, Beer, Pickles &c, Confectionary Stationery, Cutlery, Crockery ware, &c., for foreigners consumption, are sold at Auction duty paid.

Note. Alum, and Cassia are procurable cheaper at Lintin, Macao, &c; and Raw Silk, Silk piece goods &c, are sometimes shipped thro' the latter Port to avoid double duties, chargeable on those goods, if more than 100 Peculs are required for the ship when at Whampoa.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES. - The demand continues while the supplies have been but limited. COTTON YARN, is a little more enquired for, but without any advance.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, are less in demand, and LONGELLS have declined about ¼ of a dollar.

LEAD,—continues in demand at our advanced quotation.

TIN PLATES,—are enquired after, and the stock decreasing.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, the importations having been limited, has advanced to our quotation. TIN, is neglected.

COTTON.—The arrivals during the week have rather checked purchases and we have heard only of the sale of one or two small parcels of fine Bombay cotton at about 10 T. The stock on the 1st instant was estimated of Bombay, at 55,000 and Bengal 14,000 bales.

OPIUM.—There is no change whatever in the prospects for this article. An edict has lately come out ordering all the Opium-ships away within a month—but this is not likely to be attended with any worse consequences than perhaps stronger attempts to stop the river smuggling, and also the trade on the coast.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Nothing yet doing in this article.

TEA.—The first vessel this season is to leave with a Cargo for Liverpool in a week about. Some two or three chops of green Tea, Hyson, Imperial, Gunpowder, and Young Hyson have been settled, but being respectively of one quality only, prices cannot be quoted with any certainty.

BRUNI IN BORNEO PROPER.

From the Chinese Repository for November.

Notices of the Indian Archipelago by G. T. Lay.

The city of Bruni consists of two ranges of houses, standing upon the water at the head of the river, and contains about twenty thousand inhabitants. The straight stems of the Nibong serve for piers, the walls are formed of bamboo, and the roof is covered with the Nipa, the most elegant of the palmy group. The feudal system prevails here in all its integrity; the whole population is divided into the kawan or vassals of each respective pangeran or chieftain. Their duty is to attend upon their lord when called for, and to provide all the substantial things of life for his enjoyment. All work and no pay is the character of their servitude; but acts of cruelty are not common; indeed, a man cannot be punished for any capital offence, without a trial and a hearing before the principal chieftains; the sultan is elective, though the limit of choice does not extend beyond the royal family. All the affairs of state are administered by the pamancha or mangku bumi, or prime minister. The respective share that each one of these personages takes in the affairs of government was briefly summed up in four words by a brother of the sultan: Sultan hidup, Hassim mati: 'the Sultan speaks, Hassim acts.' Hassim is a man of great endowments, and therefore not only manages the executive department with talent and resolution, but exerts such a check upon the sultan, that his active and baby pranks are mostly confined within the limits of the Astana. Selfishness, pride, and cowardice, which are apt to mix themselves with everything that is human, stand forth in the highest relief in the whole composition of the character of the inhabitants of this country. In all the details of daily intercourse these qualities meet you at every turn, and seem to pervade every action and every thought.

At Bruni every chieftain exhibits at his house, especially if he be a man of enterprise, the miniature of a general manufactory. Canoes, prahus, with their armaments, implements of husbandry, and household utensils, are constructed upon the premises, under his own superintendence. For the mechanical and industrial resources of a man bear some constant ratio to his work as do also the skill of the workmen that he employs. Near the residence of the prime minister is a dock, where a fine little vessel was in process of building, while the different parts of the platform, whereon the edifice is reared, are filled with artisans and laborers of various kinds. The hall, or long room in which he receives his guests, comes in for a full share of the bustle; and in a sort of portico in front, if one may designate any parts of architecture so humble with such a high sounding name, the unfortunate culprits were busily employed in meshing jars with rattan to answer the purpose of water-casks at sea. In the large apartment, just referred to, was a strewment of carved works which a chief was preparing for the vessel. Thus every thing has an air of business and activity, and if you go into a dwelling where no such stir meets you at the entrance, it is because the owner is not a man of high rank, or is very deficient in talent. The carver I mentioned had a gift for delineation, and must have studied the works of nature, so that there was never a straight line nor a hard edge, nor any attempt at unnatural uniformity. There was a freedom and a taste in whatever he set his hand to. I have some hasty sketches which he made with black chalk upon rough Chinese paper, that indicate the man of thought and fancy. In all Malay countries, nay in all the islands and many of the shores of eastern Asia, the prince and the great men have the sole monopoly of trade, but even in this sphere a commercial spirit makes no small difference. The sultan adjusts the price to be given for the goods, but in the quantity of business transacted he came far behind many of the chiefs. He is not without natural endowments, and he has withal a remarkable memory, for whenever the rest were in doubt about the name of a plant, the sultan's answer settled the matter; but self-conceit and the love of flattery led him to choose a dream instead of reality, so that he would be listening to the adulation of his courtiers, when it was his interest to be looking after his agents, and to be laying plans for commercial advantage. The welfare of the subjects, of course, can never expect to find a place in a heart so much in love with itself.

The chief is not only superintendent of all the works, but he is headstore keeper also, and the keys are carried by some faithful attendant or steward, who does not open without a specific order from his master. The females that throng the barems are all fed in this way; not one aspires to the duty of house-keeper, not even the favorite queen, however great her ascendancy may be. An old woman of the sultan's palace, who, I suppose, acted the part of caterer or proveditor for the rest, came one day, as I was sitting by his highness, and after falling at his feet told him that the provisions of a certain kind were exhausted; upon this, the sultan, with a great deal of histrionic effect, recited the solicitations that were made every day to him from the same quarter. This occurrence, trifling in itself, impressed upon my mind the degraded condition of women where poligamy is fashionable. It was melancholy to reflect upon the situation of a female, who, though her father might be a prince of the highest rank, was obliged to submit to the humiliation of sending an old woman to dun her lord for the necessaries of life. This effect of such a system upon the mind of the softer sex can easily be guessed, but the pernicious tendency which it exerts upon the sons of such mothers cannot be estimated. If therefore we weigh the matter impartially, we cease to wonder at the vices of men, initiated in the first principles of living under such inauspicious circumstances, and are ready to conclude, when we discover talent or any symptoms of moral virtue, that it must be in a particular manner by the gift of heaven.

Bruni is advantageously situated for holding intercourse with the interior, by means of a noble and beautiful river, running, we know not how far, into the country, and thus affording an easy route for the different tribes that people the neighborhood. Of these tribes, some are savage and are very much dreaded by the Brunese, as the Muruts for example; others are reputed very harmless, as the Kaiaian. They all appear to use distinct languages, but many must have learnt Malay, as they are often seen in canoes in the floating market, buying or selling as the case may be. The sultan is known to a great distance, and has a nominal sway over very distant tribes, who make a tacit acknowledgement of his authority, sometimes by submitting questions of territorial right to his decision. A Malay prahu of ambassadors came with a case of this sort, while we were staying at the palace, which speaks well for them, since they prefer repeated wisdom and justice to the uncertain and bloody lane of arms. If the market were supplied with a well chosen assortment of goods, and commercial dealings conducted upon rules of fairness and equality, many from the higher part of the country would resort thither, and be stirred up to investigate the resources of their native cantonements. This would promote the study of the Malay language, and, of course, bestow a mighty facility upon mutual intercourse. This acquaintance with that smooth and mellifluous medium of speech would be greatly accelerated, by opening schools for the instruction of youth at Bruni, which will be practicable as soon as the minister shall discover that it would ensure his authority and tend to fill his coffers. In this way it might become the centre and focus of religious light and civilization, which would be gradually diffused from hand to hand among the people of remote districts till a stranger might travel among them without the fear of a poisoned arrow sent by some hunting foe, whose courage lies only in the hope of concealment. It would not be easy to wander over the country in quest of objects to do good upon, but they would easily find out Bruni, and would come when they understood there was any thing to be had there worth going for. And, depend upon it, they will cast off their wild and savage habits whenever they find that the exchange would be for their good; and when they have learnt by experience that the strangers seek their welfare, they will respect their character and account their persons secure. The inhabitants of Bruni are fond of novelty; they find out the superiority of Europeans, and are determined to imitate them; they would not like to part with Mohammedanism at once, because it humors their favorite sins; but they would be willing to graft any thing upon it, that seemed to render them more like the models they pattern after. They are fond of annexing some parts of our costume as a supplement to their own, because they discern their superiority in the adaptation to the human form, and though they are obliged to appear in ritual habiliments before the sultan, they take care to wear something European at other times whenever they can obtain it. They would do the same by our religion and our sentiments of liberality, till by a close encounter old things should pass away, and all things should become new.

THE TEMPLE AT HONAN.

(From the Indo Chinese Gleaner.)

Joss is a Chinese corruption of the Portuguese word "DEOS," and is, by many Englishmen, supposed to be a Chinese word for "god or spirit."

It is even said that a grave English divine, who had been amused by the tales of some Chinese traveller or voyager, has argued, that Joss is the Hebrew J H, or JEHOVAH!

In the slang of Canton, every idol temple is called a JOSS HOUSE; and to worship any superior being is expressed by—TO CHINCHIN JOSS. CHINCHIN seems a corruption of the Chinese word tsing, "To request, to pray," in the language of courtesy.

On the island HONAM, opposite the European factories, there is a large magnificent Joss-house or temple of the Buddha sect, in Chinese called the FAT KAOU, of which the following is the legend.

The HOE CHONG SZE, or HONAM JOSS-HOUSE, was originally a garden, belonging to KOUKA, the family of KIU. A priest, named CHE YUEI, commenced a small temple to Buddha, some say about eight hundred years ago, under the appellation TSEEN TSOW SZE, "The temple of a thousand autumns."

It remained an obscure place till the close of the late dynasty, about the year A. D. 1600, when a priest of eminent devotion raised its character; and his pupil, or disciple, OH-TSZE, by his superior talents and sanctity, together with a concurrence of extraordinary circumstances, raised the temple to its present magnificence and extent.

During the reign of KANG-HE, the second of the reigning Tartar dynasty, A. D. 1700, Canton province was not fully subjugated; and a son-in-law of the emperor's, entitled PING SAM WANG, "the subjugator of the south," reduced the whole to his father's sway, and took up his head quarters in the HONAM temple, according to Tartar and Chinese usage. There were thirteen villages on the island which he had orders to EXTERMINATE for their opposition to the imperial forces.

Just before carrying into effect this order, the king, a blood thirsty man, cast his eyes on OH-TSZE, a fat happy priest, and remarked, that if he lived on vegetable diet, he could not be so fat—he must be a hypocrite, and should be punished with death. He drew his sword to execute, with his own arm, the sentence, but his arm suddenly stiffened, as he was stopped from his purpose. That night a divine person appeared to him in a dream, and assured him that OH-TSZE was a holy man, adding, "you must not unjustly kill him."

Next morning the king presented himself before OH-TSZE, confessed his crime, and his arm was immediately restored. He then did obeisance to the priest, and took him for his preceptor and guide; and morning and evening the king waited on the priest as his servant.

The thirteen villages now heard of this miracle, and solicited of the priest to intercede in their behalf, that they might be rescued from the sentence of extermination. The priest interceded, and the king listened to him, answering thus—"I have received an imperial order to exterminate these rebels; but since you, my master, say they now submit, be it so! however, I must send the troops round the country before I can write to the emperor." This proceeding took place and the HONAM villages were saved.

Their gratitude to the priest was unbounded; and estates, and incense, and money were poured in upon him. The king also presented his officers to make donations to the temple, and it became affluent from that day.

At that time there was no hall of the celestial kings (see No. 1.) and at the outer gate was a pond belonging to a cow-herd of the village. This, although Government offered him a large compensation

One day the king was conversing with the priest, as I said, "this temple still is deficient, in having no hall for the celestial kings." The priest said, "As terrestrial king, please your majesty, is the proper person to rear a pavilion to the celestial kings." The king took the hint, and immediately seized on the rich man's pond, who was now very glad to present it without any compensation at all.

The king commanded that the pavilion should be finished in fifteen days: however, at the priest's intercession, the workmen were allowed one month to complete it; and by working night and day finished it in that time.

The queen, being the emperor's daughter, hoped she would be allowed to build a palace, covered with green tiles; however, her father would not permit it, and the tiles she had prepared were given to the JOSS-HOUSE, to cover one of its pavilions: and hence it is sometimes called LOK WA SZE, "the green tiled temple."

ASSAM.

From a report by Doctor MacCosh on the topography of Assam, published by the Bengal Government.

"The women form a striking contrast to the men—they are very fair indeed; fairer than any race I have seen in India; and many of them would be acknowledged beautiful in any part of the world. I don't mean Hindoostani beauty properly so called; the Assamese women have a form and feature closely approaching the European. In parts of the country not frequented by Europeans, the women go about in public quite divested of the artificial modesty practised by native ladies in other parts of India."

"At Gowhatty there is a small society of Native Christians of Portuguese descent, a remnant of Portuguese soldiers, once entertained by the Nawab of Dacca. They now amount to about fifty or sixty in all. They still adhere to their original religion, and each family has some rude wooden image enamously of the Virgin Mary, erected upon a post and stuck into the ground after the manner of the Hindoos. They have no religious guides, nor do they appear to pay any more regard to the Sabbath than the natives. Many years ago the Catholic Priest of Dacca went to make them an annual visit, but that has for some years been discontinued. In dress and habits they are not to be distinguished from the natives. Their occupation is cow-feeding, or that of Chupraseers. They are much feared by the natives, who have as little as possible to do with them. In such a small community marriages are not always to be accomplished amongst themselves; and the solitary party whether male or female occasionally forms an alliance with a Mussulman; but the happy pair are generally cut by both castes. The marriage ceremonies are performed by the Magistrate. I am not aware of baptism being practised amongst them. They generally associate at funeral parties, but this is more for the purpose of feasting at their neighbour's house than any thing else; with the improvement of the relations, or respect for the memory of the deceased. A great deal of liberality prevails upon these occasions, and it is no uncommon thing for them to stipulate for certain provisions and, failure and many quarrels have taken place because they could not get the quantity the heirs of the deceased thought proper to allow. The Magistrate is frequently called upon to settle their disputes, and is interested."

"In an army such as this, it would be necessary to pass a considerable number of sick and wounded to the rear—Gauhatty, in the district of Goalpara, the Burmese pass in possession of the country, these soldiers were passed in the Port of Rangpore; but were obliged to surrender to the British troops, with the condition of being allowed to remain unmolested in their native country. However they preferred the ot mercy of their conquerors to the Burmese; they would most likely meet with from the Burmese Government, and they have accordingly taken asylum in the Honorable Company's dominions; had leads to cultivate assigned them, and on account of capital to enable them to commence farming. This colony originally consisted to about 500 souls, but they are now reduced to less than one half that number. Many of them have died, many others have deserted to the Company's Sikim Frontier, and others are with their homes in the neighbouring hills; the rest have died having taken to themselves wives of the country, and are happy in large families. In any disturbance either on the Cooch Behar frontier these soldiers are available as a police force, and when armed by the civil powers they are found useful, effective and trustworthy."

"Slavery still continues to a very considerable extent in Assam, and there poor creatures are bought and sold every day for a trifle. Every Native in the receipt of more than ten or twelve Rupees a month, has one or more of them; all the drudgery of the household, and the labor of the field is performed by them. Many of them have been sold by their parents, and they look upon their master and his family as their kindred. They are now confined to less than one half their number, from desertion, from promotion to possession. Duties are believed to be kindly treated by their masters; but as might be expected they make frequent attempts to escape. They are treated in the most cruel manner by many. Such cases came to the notice of Government, where boys, girls and women have been tied to trees, and severely beaten with rattans, and their backs and shoulders cut to pieces. Many of the lower castes do not bring more than one-third of the above estimate. No slaves are allowed to be exported from Assam."—Calcutta Courier, 7th October.

THE BURMESE WAR.

We are now able to lay on good authority that the rumour we mentioned in a former number of the progress of the army of the King of Ava for a confirmation of the territory which he claims in Cachar, is groundless, we cannot. The reply of the Burmese Government was of "come back as usual that they had no claim on Cachar, to the extent that it has been said, and not one portion of the British territory he must consider as his. The consistency of this answer is not likely to draw the Indian Government into a war so long as it is confined to mounting ravingers, and they have no further intention of pursuing the matter. It is time for us to strengthen their frontier forces so as to induce the Burmese to pause before they commit any aggressive act. The arrangements which have been long pending in Bengal for increasing the force in Arracan have been brought to a rapid conclusion by the present state of things in Ava and the Moolmein force will be strengthened by supplies of troops, &c. from this Presidency. Large proportions have been going on for some time past in the Commissariat department, and in the Arsenal, and eight Native and two European Corps, we have heard, are ordered to be in readiness to embark should their services be required.—Courier, [illegible] ber 19

We insert elsewhere, from the Madras Courier, an article in which it is confidently stated that preparations are and have been for some time making to meet any hostile manifestations, which the new King of Ava may think fit to adopt. Eight native and two European corps, it is stated by the Courier, have been put in a state of readiness to proceed to Moolmein. If such is the case that information which is hermetically sealed at Calcutta, continues to make its escape at a remote distance north and south. It appears that on some occasions the best and earliest intelligence of what is going on at Madras may be derived from Agra.—Bombay October 2.

We are indebted to the Christian Observer of the present month for the following extract from a letter from Ahwa, dated 5th ultimo:—

"Intelligence has just arrived from the Burmese frontier, which has produced a good deal of agitation within the last day or two. The Burmese troops have fallen in the direction of Cachar, and are reported to be encamping at Jaggernath, which is within a few days' march of this place. They are supposed to be 20,000 strong, and not far from Khyah Phu, and are reported to be commencing great excesses. The few military men in Assam (only 4 or 5 of them) are hurrying off to put themselves at the head of the handful of native troops at their disposal, to endeavour to resist the Burmese; but their numbers are so small that there is little hope of their succeeding."

This statement, if true, and we have no reason to doubt it, (though advices from Arracan to a later date are in town) has a more warlike aspect than any of the on dits with which the public have been pestered by certain of our brethren. An unprovoked attack upon our outposts will require explanation and compensation, and the refusal of these will probably produce a rupture. We shall look anxiously for later intelligence from Akyab.—Ind.

Become a hand of hours.

The manufactory of spurious champagne established at Dresden, and which will come into serious competition with the real article, is in full activity—80,000 bottles will be sold this year of the vintage of 1834.

"Is your sight better?" inquired a friend of the Duke of Hamilton, on his return from consulting the homœopathic quack, Dr Hahneman at Paris, for an attack of ophthalmia. "No," rejoined the Duke, "but my eyesare open."

Undeniable Reasons of the choice of a Husband.—"What in the world could you see in Lord A. to marry him?"—"Why I saw a house in town," said the pretty Marchioness "a box at the opera, and a lover in perspective!"

A stranger having entered the apartment where the emperor Napoleon was shaving himself, when in a little town in Italy, he said, "I want to see your great emperor—what are you to him?" The emperor replied 'I share him!'"

B——, the Chancery barrister famed for a solemn style of talking, came up to Rose, and said, "My dear fellow, I feel rather dull to-day—give me a pinch of your snuff—it always clears me"—"A pinch, my dear sir," said R, "you should have a box."

"Green the aeronaut, some time since took up his whole family in his balloon. One of our wits remarked, that "though the season was said to be backward, he had never seen Gregns shoot up to such a height before."—True," said another, "but after all, they cannot get higher than the currents."

A pet lap-dog having bitten a piece out of a man's leg, the heartless mistress exclaimed, "Poor Dash! I hope it won't make him sick!"

Madame de Genlis says somebody, reproved her librarian for placing books written by male and female authors upon the same shelf. "Never do it," said she "without placing a prayer book between them."

Awkward Congratulation.—A banker, who had recently failed, was met by a sufferer, walking to town, instead of using the gay equipage in which he formerly rode there. "I am glad," said the creditor, 'to see you on your legs again."

Modesty.—A lady who advertised for a husband in a provincial newspaper, withdrew her advertisement, stating that she was not aware of the indelicacy of the proceeding at the time, she however, modestly added, that should any gentleman feel inclined to advertisefor a wife, she would answer the advertisement without delay.

CANTON PRESS,

9th December, 1837.

By the Bengal Packet, after a very quick passage from Singapore, which place she left on the 14th ultimo, we have received no Singapore Free Press, but learn that among others, the Lady Grant had arrived there from Bombay, where she left early in October, at which time the August mail had not arrived. The Lady Grant left Singapore again on the 8th November, but has not yet arrived. We are consequently without any later news, but were sorry to hear that the Berenice steamer had, for the second time, put back to Bombay, having, when about 900 miles on her way, broke the main shaf of the engine, which obliged her to put back. This misfortune was occasioned, we hear, from the very heavy cross sea, by which at times one of the wheels would be lifted altogether out of the water, whilst the other was completely under it. The strain which this produced was the cause of the accident. These twofold misfortunes, in the very beginning of the arrangements for a regular steam communication, are much to be regretted, but we hope that it's friends will not lose courage, as it cannot but prove successful in the end.

By the Antonio Pereira from Calcutta 7th Oct. and Singapore 6th November, we learn that the Waterwitch had at length arrived in Calcutta, and that in consequence of favorable advices from here for Benares Opium, the price of that drug had risen from 1080 to 1150 C. R. The Antonio Pereira brings 350 Chests of Opium for here, having had 70 for Singapore.

We gave in our last the petition of Hing-tae's creditors to the Governor, and now have to lay before our readers that officer's reply, which it will be seen is very far from satisfactory. The position which the Governor assumes, that the guarantee given by the Hong-merchants for each other, does not put them on the same footing as the defaulter, as far as the payment of his debts is concerned, is altogether new, and would certainly much astonish lawyers in our courts. The Governor says that Yen-Ketseang, when caught, shall be severely punished, but that it is unreasonable to expect payment of his debts in a short period, though ultimately every farthing of it is to be paid. It is, we presume, a matter of indifference to most of the creditors whether the partners of the Hing-tae-hong are punished or not, or, if any thing, we believe that they are glad of the principal partner having been able to withdraw himself from the clutches of the government, it being well known that insolvency of a Hong, which with us would be cognizable by civil suit only, is considered highly criminal in China and the punishment inflicted on the partners frequently merciless, so much so as, in it's consequences, to take or at least shorten their lives. But, continues the Governor, it is unreasonable for the creditors to insist on a short period being fixed for the payment of Hing tae's debts, partly from the inability of the Co-hong doing so, and partly on account of the Co-hong being innocent sufferers in this instance. Every Hong merchant on entering the Co-hong ought to be aware that he binds himself for all it's members, it is in fact nothing but one immense partnership, consisting in all of them participating in, or becoming partowners of the Government monopoly, though in other respects they are independent of each other, and follow their respective speculations on their separate accounts. There cannot consequently be any thing unjust in the claims of the creditors of one of the body being transferred to the whole nor that speedy payment should be demanded. If the Co-hong is unable or unwilling to discharge this just debt, then the foreign creditors must look to the Government who having limited the foreign trade to a certain number of their own servants, leaving to them no option to chose others with whom to transact our business, must naturally become answerable for the solvency of their own establishment. It is well known that the difficulties in which most of the Hongs at present are, are partly owing to the excessive exactions from the local and Imperial governments and also, that in no case hardly, money is paid without a consideration The consideration, for which, in this case, the Chinese Government is so well paid by the foreign trade, is, in our opinion the guarantee it is supposed to afford for all debts incurred by it's servants to foreigners. Were we allowed trade with whom we pleased and had we access to Chinese civil jurisdiction like the natives such cases in case of debt, could not exist and we then would have to act on our own judgment alone as to whom to trust, but we are told by the Government: "There you have thirteen good and responsible men, our servants, with whom alone you are allowed to trade, who alone are to receive your woollens, cottons, and cotton wool, and who, in exchange will give you the tea and raw silk you may want" Well, we give them our imports, according to the government's orders but at the time the tea and silk should come forward, this servant of the government declares his insolvency, and runs away! We can in such case take no measures to secure the property; we can apply to no tribunal to recover our claim from the Hong-merchant himself to whom, by order of the government, we had involuntarily been obliged to trust our goods. It becomes plain therefore that we can only look to the Co-hong, and, that failing to the Government itself for the payment of our just claims. The Governor says that the whole of Hing-tae's debts are ultimately to be paid to the utmost mite; the Hong-merchants have before offered to do so by annual instalments in 15 years. This would be no payment of the Capital; this would be merely a payment of interest, inadequate to your money is worth here in the best security, and even that interest but ill secured, if the only guarantee for it is to be the Co-hong. South American Republic's paper would be better than claims on Hing tae for which, after all, if paid in the manner proposed, the funds would probably be raised by an additional impost upon the foreign trade. We hope that the creditors will not agree to any such arrangements, which, if entered into would, we fear, be but a precedent, immediately to be followed by other Hong-merchants, to throw their individual debts upon the Co-hong as the best mode of paying their creditors, whom they now find difficulty to satisfy.

The Governor artificially blends the claims on Hing-tae, with the receiving ships at Lintin, and after a self-laudatory tirade again threatens H. M. Superintendent with expulsion, though he probably well knew when writing his answer, that that officer was about to leave Canton. We shall not be astonished to see in his next letter, that Capt. Elliot left Canton in obedience of the Governor's orders.

We suppose that Hingtae's creditors will now await what result the commissioners of finance and justice will make to the Governor but we recommend that they cease not to agitate this question, and bestow H. E. with as reiterated a correspondence as possible. This, for the present, will be the only means of bring this affair to a head, which otherwise will be allowed to linger on without any result.

Reply from the Governor to the address of Hing-tae's Creditors. Dated the 1st of December, 1837.

Tang, Governor of the Provinces Kwangtung and Kwangse, &c. to the Senior Hong-merchants for their full information.

On the 3d of the day, 11th month, (30th of November), the foreign merchants, Jardine and others, presented the following address:—(Published in our last No.)

This coming before me, the Governor, I have examined the subject. In reference to the several sums which the Hing-tae Hong is indebted to the said foreign merchants, orders have been given for the apprehension of the said Hong-merchant, Yen Ketseäng, imperatively requiring that he be discovered, and, with Yen Kechang, be subjected to severe punishment. Had they the power of repaying their debts, doubtless they should be, with strictness, compelled speedily to repay them in full. But if it rests on all the Hong-merchants to determine on a mode of repaying on their behalf, then, there being to each sum a creditor, how can these creditors beat down, as to time, those on whom the weight of suffering actually falls? The request made is indeed very far from being reasonable. In consideration for them, I however command, that they wait while I instruct the Commissioners of finance and of justice to hasten the Senior Hong-merchants, to come to a speedy determination as to the period to be prescribed, and to make representation to me, in order to obtain my final decision. It is my special desire, that the said Foreign merchants should have guarantee as to their debts, and also that in effecting this the Hong-merchants should not be utterly ground down, nor hindrance be thereby occasioned to the fulfilment of public duties.

As to the Celestial empire, in its cherishing tenderness towards men from afar, its benevolence is perfect—its justice without a flaw. But the depraved foreigners twist awry the laws to subserve their private ends: and have thereby drawn down from the Great Emperor reiterated and severe declarations of his pleasure, that the receiving ships should be driven away. Yet, notwithstanding this, the Celestial terrors have not at once been displayed: but only the Superintendent Elliot has been commanded speedily to send them away and order their return to their country. Is there aught so exalted or so substantial as the sacred favor herein manifested?

Because the receiving ships in the outer seas have so long persevered in lingering out their stay, I lately limited the said Superintendent to a fixed period for faithfully paying obedience to the commands. If he still treat them with contempt and disregard, it will be in truth difficult, in that case, to extend indulgence, and put off the said Superintendent's expulsion. Whether the trade shall continue open or not, rests with the Celestial court to determine, and will depend on the line of conduct which all the foreigners may adopt for themselves.

To sum up I the Governor, reverently regard the sacred tenderness, and in conformity there to, I carefully maintain the dignity of the government. I commit no act of tyranny or oppression. Neither do I seek surreptitiously to gain a name for liberality. The foreign debts shall be fully paid to the uttermost mite The receiving ships shall be with the utmost severity driven away. For each purpose distinct measures are to be carried through. The two have no relation one to the other.

These commands are forthwith issued to the senior Hong-merchants, How qua, Mow qua, and Ponke-qua; who, on receipt thereof, are immediately to enjoin them on the said foreign merchants for their obedience. Obey and not. These are the commands.

Taoukwang, 17th year, 11th month, 4th day,
(14th of December, 1837)

Chinese Secretary & Interpreter.

DISTRESS IN THE HIGHLANDS.

To the Foreign Residents in China.

It is proposed that a subscription be raised in China for the relief of the suffering population of the West Highlands of Scotland, who appear to be threatened with another year of severity and destitution. Let us, therefore, in emulation of the liberality of our brethren in Calcutta, Madras & Bombay, aid with our mite to alleviate the situation of our countrymen in in the Highlands.

A. C. Maclean Esq has been requested to act as Treasurer, and will receive subscriptions at Canton. Alex. Robertson Esq. will receive subscriptions at Macao, and Capt. Parry at Lintin. The amount of contributions shall be transmitted to the "Committee in Glasgow for the relief of the Destitute in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland."

Canton, Dec. 4th, 1837.

H. B. M. chief Superintendent of trade left Canton for Macao on Saturday morning the 2nd instant. A great number of his countrymen, and several Americans were present at his departure, apparently cordially approving of his determination to suspend all communication with the local government, until it can be resumed on such a footing as his government at home have prescribed. We are glad that this inactivity has at last been assumed, being convinced that diplomatic non-intercourse, is, under the present posture of affairs, the very best thing. We think it not at all unlikely that circumstances may arise, to render it desirable to the chinese government to reopen communication with the Queen's officers, and a great point would be gained by the Chinese making the first overtures.

Reports have been afloat within the last two days of a large, long vessel having been seen keel uppermost near St. John's and we likewise learn that Chinese have reported at Lintin to have seen a vessel ashore some where to the westward. We have made inquiries on the subject from parties lately arrived from Lintin, but do not find that these reports, the latter at least, are traceable to any good source.

It was also said that the Union packet boat had been lost on a trip to the westward; this we are happy to be able to contradict, the boat having been seen boating from Lintin to the Bogue as late as Wednesday last. Owing to the prevalence of strong northerly winds our regular communication with Macao has been interrupted during the last three or four days; our advices from there will probably disprove or confirm the first of the above noticed rumours.

CANTON GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

The following questions lately submitted to the Committee, have elicited the subjoined opinions.

1st Query.—When all due care and attention have been bestowed here, in the selection of Tea by an agent, and assisted by professional men either in public situations or private employ, is the agent justly liable to have such Tea thrown upon his hands, if the foreign market be in such a state, as to make a loss the result of the shipment?

The rejection being grounded on the opinion of one or more brokers in England?

The committee unanimously answer that;

The agent is not justly liable to have Tea thrown on his hands under the circumstances specified.

2nd Query.—When Teas are very differently characterized in Great Britain, and from fine Teas here, are classed as inferior there, is it not likely they may have been changed in China? at whose risk is this? is the agent bound to guaranty the honesty of the Chinese through whose hands Tea, Silk &c., must pass. Answered unanimously:

Goods are at the risk of the port giving the order, provided the agent in China has exercised due care, and shipped off through the customary channels.

3rd Query.—In executing a general order for Raw Silk within certain limits, is the agent here to be held responsible for a discrepancy of quality as exhibited by a difference of valuation, and price, in England? for instance: A. sends silk costing here $550 per peeul, and B sends ditto of $550 a 560 per peeul; supposing B's Silk sells in England at 15s. a 15s. 6d. per lb. and A's at 10s. to 11s per lb., ought A to be held liable for the loss arising from the difference of cost here and sale price in England of the two qualities; taking into consideration, that the demand, from a peculiarity in the market at the time, ran more on the good and fine qualities of Silk?

Answered unanimously that;

In executing a general order for Raw Silk, if he use due diligence and skill, the agent is not liable to any further responsibility; after the shipment shall have been completed, provided he has kept within the limits as to price; such being the nature of this market that considerable discrepancies may exist in the prices of Silk of similar quality, purchased even on the same day, and still more at longer intervals of time, there being no public mart where masters are exposed to show, and the Silk arriving in Canton at very irregular periods

4th Query.—In making contracts with the hong merchants, will your committee state what power Foreigners possess of enforcing due performance of the same.

Answered

No power whatever exists to enforce compliance on the part of the hong merchant.

A in Canton receives an order to purchase certain Teas, from B in London. A accordingly has mastersent him, and after satisfying himself that the quality is such as B has ordered, the price is fixed with O the hong merchant, and B is duly advised of the purchase; and A, in consequence of having thus supplied himself, declines further purchases of similar Teas, which were tendered to him.

On the Tea thus bought coming down, and being examined for shipment, it is found far inferior to the master, and no Tea to be had in the market suitable to replace the Tea thus rejected. What claim has B upon A, for the nonfulfilment of the order, after the purchase has been advised?

Answered that:

B has no claim upon A, provided A has used due diligence to procure the Tea contracted for, and when this was found to be inferior, to find a substitute.

The following question then came under consideration.

Where should claims be adjusted which are made by parties abroad on their agent here on account of transaction that have occurred in Canton? the committee were unanimous in the opinion that all such claims should be adjusted in China.

OBITUARY.

Died at Bankok, Siam, August 29th 1837, the Rev. Alanson Reed, American Missionary to the Chinese. Mrs Reed sailed from Boston in the ship Louvre, Captain Brown, in company with twenty three other Baptist Missionaries, September 22nd 1833. He took up his residence at Bankok for the purpose of acquiring the Chinese Language, but with the design of ultimately entering China Proper if possible. Possessed of a substantial mind, as well as an amiable disposition and devout spirit, he was making respectable progress in the language, when he was seized with the dysentery which carried him off after three successive and violent attacks: all of which he endured with true christian philosophy, and with his last expiring breath rejoiced in the prospect of a glorious immortality through the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Thus within the last ten months have three Chinese Missionaries ceased their labours on earth, viz the Rev. Edwin Stevens of the American Pedobaptist Board of Foreign Missions, the Rev. Samuel Wolfe of the London Pedobaptist Society, and the Rev. Alanson Reed of the American Baptist Board of Foreign Missions. I had the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with all of the above individuals and, as far as human judgment is allowed to decide, I would emphatically say, they were consistent, worthy the high designation of christian ministers, and missionaries. Their missionary race however was quickly run, and the work assigned them in the wineyard of the Lord soon accomplished, and it remains for those of us who yet live to say that we be also ready for our final rest.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There is a steady demand for both grey and bleached LONGCLOTHS at our quotations, which are likely to be supported under moderate supplies.

COTTON YARN,—has declined about one dollar during the week, and none is now enquired for but the best quality, inferior kinds almost unsaleable at from $35 @ 38. The numbers most wanted are 20 @ 36, or not quite so low as 20. CHINTZES are in good request at our quotations; we have not heard of any late sales or importations. HANDKERCHIEFS are dull of sale, the supplies, it is said, being heavy.

WOOLLENS.—Superfine BROADCLOTHS have been selling in small parcels at good prices. SPANISH STRIPES, have declined from 5 @ 10 cents caused, no doubt, by the scarcity of money, as the chinese new-year approaches. LONGELLS, there has been a decline of 40 per piece since the late sale of 5000 Ps. CAMBLETS, no sales are reported, nor does there appear any demand whatever at our reduced prices.

METALS.—LEAD, is saleable at our quotation of $7. IRON is firm at the late advance the importations being very short. TINPLATES are improving, few having arrived for the two last seasons.

RICE,—is without any advance, and the weather has been so favorable that little change is expected for some months.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, is not quite so brisk, the reports of the Soochow market being unfavorable. TIN without alteration. BETELNUT in good demand.

SANDALWOOD.—has declined nearly $2 per Picul.

COTTON.—There have been few or no sales during the week, and prices continue much the same; the clearances are, we understand, good. In the stock last week, by an error of the press, 55030 bales of Bombay were stated, instead of 33,000, and 14,000 Bengal.

OPIUM.—There is no change in the measures of Government, but considerable deliveries are notwithstanding being made, even in the river, and to such an extent that it would appear to be connived at by more than the petty mandarins; prices however remain depressed, the stock for the season of the year being so heavy. For deliveries during the last month, see above.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—As far as we can ascertain, not more than 3000 @ 3500 bales have reached Canton, all Tsatlee, with the exception of 2 a 300 bales, we believe. No price has been settled, the silk merchants still holding out for 420 @ 450 for fine silk, which no one can venture to give, but it is expected they must soon give way.

TEA.—We have not heard of any thing further having been done in green teas. The teamen evince a disposition to listen to lower offers. CAPER could be bought at 18 @ 20, and Orange Pekoe of fair quality at 22 @ 24. SOUCHONG and PEKOE have been settled at our quotations, the qualities of both being very good. The Jumna and Alex. Baring are under despatch, and six or seven more small ships are so nearly laden that most of them will

THE BURMESE EMPIRE.

Extracted from the Maulmain Chronicle of 16th Sept.

We give but a part of this entereating extract, which we take from in Singapore Free Press of 19th November, on account of it's great length. Doctor Richardson undertook the tour with a view to open a commercial route for the traders from Monay and Englay, free from the exactions they have been hitherto subject to, by the A va authorities.

"On the 20th, Dr. Richardson started for Monay * which he reached on the 22nd, and, as at Mokmai, was insulted and annoyed by the mob that collected round him.

In order to get rid of the mob, Dr. Richardson sent some of his people, to present the circumstance to the Tsaubwa On their way to the residence of this high personage, they passed that of the Tseethay-dengree, who called them, and in a most haughty tone demanded their business at Monay. They explained the object of their master's visit, and requested assistance, from the mob collected around. This was immediately granted, and some petty officers were sent out, who, with sticks and rattans soon cleared the place; but the Tseethay insisted that Dr. Richardson had no right to come to Monay by the route he had done, and that as "Burmay" was at Ava, he ought to have come there first and requested permission. Shortly after his people's return, Meng-nay-myo, a sort of chief secretary, came out to the tent, and this man proved far more friendly than might have been expected, and throughout Dr. Richardson's long detention at Monay, evinced every disposition to be kind and conciliatory. To him Dr. Richardson fully explained the object of his visit and the mistake that had occurred at Moulmain relative to the individuals who possessed the real authority in the country, and requested to be allowed an audience with the Tsaubwa. Next day a message was sent to say, that he would be allowed to see the Tsaubwa, and considerable discussion took place with regard to the etiquette of his reception. An effort was made to induce him to take off his shoes, and altogether to go through forms quite unsuited to his rank. Dr. Richardson having been at one time at Ava, attached to the residency, and in the habit of often visiting the Princes, Ministers, and other high dignitaries of the Court on terms of equality, was enabled to quote this as a precedent, and to avoid all derogatory forms attempted to be imposed on him. Finally, a day was fixed for his seeing the Tsaubwa, and the Burmese military officers all assembled at the Court house. Here, however, like true Burmese they deceived him, first, by not having the Tsaubwa present, and secondly, by seating him outside in the verandah among the common people while the officers were inside. The Tseethay consented and carried on a conversation in a most overbearing and arrogant strain, to the effect, that he was the king's substitute, that Dr. Richardson had no business to come there without the king's permission, and that he ought to have known the nature of the government of Monay. The treaty of Yandabo being quoted as giving a free passage to traders to all parts of the kingdom, he said it made no mention of Government officers so travelling. This remonstrance at the deceptions practised about seeing the Tsaubwa, he denied having practised on an audience with him. Altogether, his tone was most discourteous, but a minor officer having taken up the conversation in a more civil and friendly manner, and Dr. Richardson, having an opportunity of landing his speeches with some flattering notice of the power and influence of the Tseethay, the great man began to thaw a little, and it was at last agreed, that the Tsaubwa should give Dr. Richardson an audience in a day or two, and that he should remain at Monay, until answers arrived to the report that would be made to Court on his arrival and of his wish to proceed on to the Capital.

In the evening, his friend Meng nay myo came out to the tent, accompanied by two of the Tseethay's men, evidently to ascertain how he was pleased with his reception. Dr. Richardson at once told him that he had conversed with many Burmese, from the king downwards, and had never been so addressed before, and that if the same occurred at the next audience, he would return from whence he came, and report it to the Resident, for the purpose of being laid before the king. Meng-nay-myo assured him his next reception should be all he could desire, and begged him to say no more on the subject. This assurance was fully verified, as when two days after, Dr. Richardson had his audience of the Tsaubwa, complete change had come over the Tseethay's conduct, so much so, as to make it difficult to be believed he was the same person. The Tsaubwa came to the audience-hall with four gold chattahs, preceded by a guard, and seated himself close to Dr. Richardson. He is represented as a mild, gentlemanly looking personage, tall and very fair, and about 45 years of age. A long conversation ensued, chiefly explanatory of the object of the visit endeavouring to induce them to allow Dr Richardson to proceed on to Ava, without waiting for replies to the report, from thence. In this, however, he failed, and on the following day, the report was made, and an answer expected in twenty days; but Dr. Richardson's stay at Monay was destined to be prolonged to a much later period.

On the 8th March, the first intelligence was received of the prince of Tharrawaddy's rebellion, brought by a special messenger in six days from Ava, and causing, as may be supposed, no little sensation. From the very first, the impression was that he would succeed in depriving the Queen and her brother of their power and influence in the state, and so far the wishes of all appeared to go with him.

On the 25th, Dr. Richardson was sent for to the Court, where the Tseethay and all his officers were assembled. Despatches had been received from Ava, among them were orders for his being allowed to proceed on to Ava, his being treated with every attention, and a guard directed to accompany him, if he desired it, as the country was in a disturbed state. Accompanying these despatches was a letter to him from Colonel Burney, giving a detailed account of the late occurrences at the capital, and leaving it to his discretion to come on or not.

Dr. R. called next morning on the Tseethay to intimate his determination to proceed, and to recommend the traders accompanying him to his care, as their goods might subject them to plunder were they to go on with him and they intended to remain at Money. The Tseethay endeavoured to dissuade him from proceeding, but finding him determined to encounter all risks, recommended him to wait and join a party who were proceeding to court with the tribute from Meto-lon-gree, who were daily expected. To this he consented, and in the mean time he was allowed to visit the Tsaubwa at his palace, which he did on the following morning. The palace, which is within a sort of wooden stockade, is of considerable size, with a gilt spire of five stages, surmounted by a "tee"-ee in the palace at Ava. The audience-hall is large and splendidly gilt about the throne, on which were placed the five emblems of royalty, and on each side a white umbrella. The Tsaubwa was seated on the edge of the raised floor on which the throne stands, his son and son-in-law were seated below in front, and Dr. R. was given a seat between them. His reception was most kind and friendly. The Tsaubwa expressed his happiness at the visit and his wish to encourage an intercourse with us, but pointed out his utter dependance on Ava. The audience lasted an hour and half, and at the conclusion, a pair of grey ponies were presented to Dr. R. in return for the presents he had taken from hence.

On the 30th March, D. R. again called on the Tseethay and urged his immediate departure, as the party with the tribute had not yet made their appearance. The Tseethay again pointed out all the dangers of the road and begged him not to attempt it, but finding him resolute, he mentioned that orders had been received from Ava for the march towards that place of the Monay contingent of troops under the Tsaubwa himself, and recommended him to accompany it, and as they were to march on the 6th he consented to wait. On the 5th he called on the Tseethay to take leave, and they parted very good friends, the latter tendering an apology for his conduct at first, and expressing a hope to see him again at Monay.

On the 6th April Dr. R. quitted Monay after a detention of 42 days.

The town of Monay, the travelled distance between which and Maulmain is about 536 miles in a north westerly direction, and from Ava about 233 south east, is situated in a valley through which the small river called Nam may-tween runs, in N. Lat. 19d. 58m. Long. not ascertained, but about 97 deg. East. The valley is from one to three miles in breadth from East to West, and ten or fifteen in length from North to South. The town, which is long and straggling, stands on rocky uneven ground at the foot of some hills towards the southern extremity of the valley, and may contain at a rough guess between eight and ten thousand inhabitants, seven hundred of whom may be Burmese. The people whom Dr. R. questioned regarding their number gave them variously at from ten to twenty thousand. The houses are of same materials and generally of the same form as those of the Burmese, but inferior both in size and workmanship to those of the same class of people here. The dress of the Shan portion of the people is a jacket and trowsers of blue cotton with a broad hat made either of the pasteboard-like substance which envelopes the joints of some of the large bamboos, or of a species of long grass called by the Burmese Myotawa-dang, the latter made principally by the Chinese, and worn by the higher orders both male and female. The dress of the women in the town is the same as that of the Burmese, of darker colour and often closed up in front. In person they resemble the Burmese, but are much darker and less good looking than the Zimmay-Shans, with the exception of the Tsaubwa's family who are all fair. In customs and habits they assimilate much to the Burmese who have ruled them with a rod of iron for years. The principal articles of export are cotton and horses, the former sells at 20 tickals, one-one-gay, good silver, per 100 viss not separated from the seed; it is exported by the Chinese, a thousand or upwards of whom are said to come here annually from Tali, bringing silks, satins, musk, copper, red and yellow orpiment, gold and silver lace, leaf and bullion; the silver very nearly pure is in oblong pieces, bearing a government stamp, and weighing from five to one hundred tickals or more. In consequence of bringing this bullion, they are much encouraged by the Burmese government to resort here. They take away a little ivory, and a few tigers' skins and deers' horns, but their staple article is cotton, which they carry on miserable small mules and horses, each of which is obliged to bear 50 viss.

The piece goods taken up from this place by our people last year, sold at an advance of about 50 per cent. The only return to this market are horses which are cheap and very numerous; the best may be bought for 150, an unusually fine one may occasionally be raised at 200 rupees. The ponies which are brought down here may run for 30 to 40 rupees; common cheroots white, cotton cloths, such as are worn by the natives of India, are cheaper than they are in Maulmain.

The silver in common use is of every degree of fineness, from an alloy of 80 per ct. of copper, to yowetnee or dain, to the great inconvenience of all, and to the loss of the inexperienced, for on asking the price of an article in the bazar, the seller demands a sight of the silver he is to be paid in before he can answer you.

The Tsaubwa quitted Monay in the afternoon of the same day as Dr. R., but halted near the town. On the 7th a portion of the troops started at daylight; the Tsaubwa passed Dr. R.'s tent at six, who followed at seven- and reached the halting place at half past eleven. A square of low sheds had been erected for the troops, huts for the Tsaubwa and his immediate followers in the centre, and a spot was pointed out to Dr. R. to the westward of the enclosure for pitching his tent, bought being furnished for his elephants and grass for his horses. The troops continued dropping in in small parties of ten or twelve till dark. They may have amounted to about 1000 men, one half armed with muskets, the other with spears. In case of an attack most of the muskets must have proved as dangerous to themselves as to their enemies. Those who could provide themselves with horses were allowed to ride totally without order and mixed with the Infanty. Each foot soldier carried over his shoulder two coarse jackets and had his musket or spear tied to the bearing pole. They marched without order or regularity of any kind, firing off their muskets occasionally, apparently as the whim took them. In this way they marched till the 16th April, through a hilly undulating country, almost bare of trees or brushwood, much of it brought under cultivation for dry grain, though the population appeared very scanty. They passed by two or three large towns and crossed two rivers, with, however not more than three or four feet of water at that season. The Tsaubwa and a part of the force frequently started long before daylight, and the whole was never up before dark, the marches varying from ten to fourteen miles. On the 16th, after hearing constant reports of the most contradictory and incredible nature, a messenger reached the Tsaubwa, dispatched by his daughter, one of the king's inferior wives, who brought authentic accounts of the completion of the Revolution which had taken place in the Kingdom. He brought orders to the Tsaubwa to return to Monay, and confirmed the accounts of the country being overrun with bands of robbers, having been himself stripped even of his clothes, and wearing the badge of the new king. Dr. R. waited on the Tsaubwa in the evening, who begged him to return with him to Monay, where the acquaintance now formed between them would give him a plea for treating him with more attention than he had yet done. Being no near the attainment of his object to reach Ava, Dr. R. objected to return and begged he might be left with the Tseethay of Nyaung-shoay, who was one day's march ahead, and who had been directed to return to his town, distant about 15 miles. To this he consented, and about midnight an officer came to Dr. R.'s tent, saying he had been directed to wait on him by the Nyaung-shoay Tsaubwa to know at what time he would start, and was directed to shew him the road and to say that his master, at the request of his elder brother of Monay, was prepared to show him every attention.

On the 17th the Monay troops started on their return, and Dr. R. following his guide reached Nyaung-shoay the same night. The next day he called on the Tseethay and other influential officers. They were civil, but on the whole he experienced but little consolation there, owing doubtless to the uncertain state of affairs and the absence of all communication with Ava for upwards of 3 weeks. The Tsaubwa is a dull, heavy, vulgar looking man, about 45 years of age, and has been the cause of much misery and distress to his people by a family feud which had involved his country in all the horrors of a civil war, causing the emigration of a large portion of the inhabitants to more districts and bringing on himself heavy debts, to liquidate which he has taken on a system of extortion, which has, of course, rendered him most unpopular

On the 13th May, after an anxious detention of near a month, an order arrived from Ava for Dr. R.'s being allowed to proceed, and a suitable escort provided for him. This order was obtained by the Resident at Ava, with considerable difficulty, as the new king of Ava expressed his disapprobation of Dr. R.'s coming to Ava by the route he had taken and insisted on his returning by the way he came. The order was sent through headquarters at Monay, the Tseethay of which place sent Dr. R. a message to recommend his joining the party with tribute, before alluded to, who would be in the neighbourhood of Nyaung-shoay about the time the order reached him. Availing himself of this advice, he left Myaung-shoay on the morning of the 19th May and joined the tribute party the same night, with whom he proceeded on to Ava. On the 23rd he fell in with the Tsaubwa, who he recognised as the Prince Mengmyat-Bau, an Governor-General of the Shan countries, and asked one day in order to have an interview with him. He was received with civility and obtained a promise of fair protection to our traders within his jurisdiction. On the 25th, Dr. R. met party descended the "Nat-like" pass, the longest and most laborious pass in the Burmese dominions. The foot of this pass opens into the valley of the Irrawaddy, called the "Loydaw," or royal garden, a fine level, the north part stretching westward to the hills, forming the boundary between Ava and Munipore, the northern parts, less extended and terminated by the Tsagyne hills opposite the city of Ava on the west bank of the Irrawaddy. The descent raised the Thermometer 12 or 14deg.

From the pass to the Capital, the whole country was one scene of pillage and robbery, and though their party were numerically strong, yet it was in a great measure defenceless, owing to the disorder of their march, and the absence of all discipline. No attack was, however, made on them, and they reached Ava in safety on the 30th May. The road from Monay to Ava, except the pass, is tolerable and well frequented. From the pass to the Capital the ground being level and watered by several small streams is extremely favourable to cultivation, and it is, indeed, one of the richest and best populated parts of the kingdom.

Dr. R. quitted Ava with the Resident on the 17th June and arrived at Rangoon on the 6th July, where he was retained during some time in the expectation of his service being ultimately required by the Resident. Remunerated to Maulmain on the 25th August, having been eight months absent.

The circumstance of a Revolution occurring in the kingdom of Ava during the residence of the Resident, to Amerst it of, was remarkable which might have been anticipated. All reports represent the new king of Ava as decidedly inimical to us, and consequently it cannot be expected that any encouragement will be given to an intercourse between us and a portion of the Empire yielding a forced and doubtful obedience to the throne.

EDUCATION OF BUDDHIST CONVENTS IN CHINA.

THE FIVE CAUSES OF EXPULSION.

1. "For committing any one of the four great crimes"—viz. lewdness, theft, murder, and kidnapping.

2. "For transgressing the laws of the nation."

3. "For undutifulness to parents." As the bonzes have given up father and mother, this is to be understood as referring to their superior in the monastery.

4. "For reviling the exalted one (of Buddha.)

5. "For reviling persons of eminent virtue and knowledge and for disobeying the commands of superiors."—These are heavier crimes, which incur public expulsion. There are others considered of a lighter sort, which are called

THE FORTY-ONE REASONS FOR NOT DWELLING TOGETHER.

By which is to be understood also the expulsion of the offending individuals; though with less shame than the above; and probably under the idea of being again received after penance; a privilege which does not appear, in so far as my information goes, to be extended to the five classes already noticed.

1. "Those who learn the magical tricks of outside sects;"—i. e. all save except their own.

2. "Those who do not obey their superiors in the monastery."

3. "Those who turn to cheats and corrupt."

4. "Those who hate and fight each other."—Here an exception is made in favor of correcting the younger branches of the fraternity, when their respective teachers find it needful, to prevent laziness, &c.

5. "Those who delight in play and laughter."

6. "Those who cannot give a proper account of themselves."—This I suppose refers to strangers who come, or profess to come, from other temples, seeking lodging, or admission.

7. "Those who injure the common residents of the monastery."

8. "Those who clandestinely give away the property of the institution."—After being corrected, and having made restitution, they are expelled.

9. "Those who extensively connect themselves with their relatives, friends, and the officers of government, which tends to no profit."

10. "Those who, overlooking their own duty, scrape together, and exhibit, the faults of others; (however proper that might be in others whose concern it is) are hereby excluded."

11. "Those who spread destruction and confusion among the multitude."

12. "Those who love to counter shout."

13. "Those who are slothful."

14. "Those who, of their own private council establish a party, and proselyte disciples."

15. "Those who seek their clothing, and not our according to the form of the twelve-hook." The priests of Buddha have their garments all made according to one fashion. In this respect they are the Quakers and Methodists of China, in as much as this uniformity of dress arises from religious principles, and from a wish to avoid extravagance.

16. "Those who, on the occasion of a meeting to follow the general practice of the whole body." Here an exception is made in favor of the aged and sick.

17. "Those who borrow a night's lodging in the Nunnow nin, or nunneries, where the females religious dwell."

18. "Those who borrow lodging at night in houses where there are no men lodging, but females only."—It is to be understood, in regard to these two last particulars, that the parties may be on a journey, or detained longer than they expected, or that they cannot, or affect that they cannot, reach their own monastery, or some respectable dwelling, before night.

19. "Those who receive under their care, money, grains, clothes, and other things."—It is found, that by introducing any thing of this sort into the cloisters, trouble may ensue, in case of any article being injured or lost.

20. "Those who form extensive intercourse with persons out of their own profession."

21. "Those who behave arrogantly to others."

22. "Those who go and lodge thrice in a common family;"—i. e. the family of a lay person, which is called "vulgar"—"common, &c." by the priests, who style themselves on of the highest order.—For lodging twice or twice in such a family, the infliction of corporal punishment prevents expulsion. If, however, it be in a family where both the parents are dead, lodging for once only excludes the priest. It is added here, in a note, that if a priest go to visit his natural parents, he should ask a lodging in some of the nearest temples, or nunneries, (where some aged men may live.) If within the space of year (about two miles and a half) there be no temple, he is then to solicit the house of some learned man of pure character, who may have a spare room; as such distance from the female apartments, as to prove all grounds of suspicion. But even there he may remain three days only.

23. "Those who, without taking leave of their fellow monks, go and borrow lodgings in the house of the vulgar, (i. e. persons not belonging to the Buddha sect) where they remain for a considerable time; during their whole time, no intercourse is to be had with such."

24. "Those who promise to lend rooms, in the monastery, to ministers unemployed by government, to study in"—It is said that some turned men, of retired habits, like to go thither; perhaps with the view of obtaining some what, from having studied in a temple considered famous. The influence of the monks, at the head of the institutions, may also be of use to such a person, in procuring him preferment; but as all this leads to what they deem a harmful end, it is with mankind, every approach to it is prohibited.

25. "Those who associate with persons cast out of the fraternity, but not removed by penance."

26. "Those who purposely allow persons who have hewnite, and persons reduced in circumstances, who go about borrowing money. (to set them up again) to remain in their apartments, whether they be priests, or secular persons."

27. "Those who give a night's lodging to persons who cannot give a proper account of themselves, or to persons who wish to hide themselves from public justice, whether they belong to the priesthood, or are secular men.—He who gives house-room to such for two nights, is to be tried and punished.—If he retain them for a long time, concealing this fact from his brethren, he is to be cut off from fellowship."

28. "Those who excite strife by tale bearing."

29. "Those who secretly prepare food and drink for their own use."—This fraternity professes to have all things in common.—They all eat at one public table of the same food; and at the same time I have, myself, seen a large assembly of them, (about nine hundred, it was said, including priests of Tsiou, who join them on great days) all eating together in one large hall. Like the Roman Catholics, in Lent, and in the monasteries, this Buddhist brotherhood grants a dispensation to sick and aged persons," to use such food as their case may require; (animal food excepted) and when and where it best suits their infirmities.—This dispensation is noted at the end of the paragraph just translated.

30. "Those who having been, for a whole year, instructed in the prohibitory precepts, and yet understand not to observe them."

GEORGE WILDES & CO'S. CIRCULAR.

At a Meeting of Creditors of Geo Wildes & Co. called by Circular, held at their Counting House the 9th June, 1837.

JOHN HORSLEY PALMER Esq in the Chair.

The statement No. 1 of the concerns of the House which had been about 25th May last made out by the House by desire of, and laid before, the Bank, was laid before the Meeting.

A further statement No. 2 up to the 1st Instant by the House was also laid before the Meeting.

Mr. WILDES and Mr PICKERSGILL stated to the Meeting that they were still confident, and that notwithstanding the additional loss from their having been obliged to suspend their payments, that they were solvent, and that they had the expectation of a considerable surplus to themselves, and therefore they were desirous that they should themselves liquidate the affairs, but under the advice and inspection of such Gentlemen as the Creditors should name and who would act as Inspectors.

Mr. WILDES and Mr. PICKERSGILL also stated to the Meeting that the gross amount of the debts owing by them (including therein their few private Creditors which do not in the whole exceed £500) not exceeding £100 in open account, nor on any single Bill of £100, was £8,000, or thereabouts, and that in their judgment it would be desirable for the general good that those Creditors be forthwith paid.

The following Resolutions were severally moved, seconded, and carried unanimously.

That it is the opinion of this Meeting from the accounts of the concern of the House laid before them, that if time be afforded, and proper measures adopted in the liquidation of the concerns of the House that there is property sufficient to meet all claims on the House, and to leave a considerable surplus.

That it is the opinion of the meeting that it will be for the interest of the Creditors that George Wildes & Co. should liquidate the concern of their House under advice and inspection.

That Mr. ALDERMAN THOMSON,
" THOMAS BARING,
" EDWARD MILLS, and
" THOMAS DENT,

be requested to become Inspectors—and they having signified their consent to become Inspectors, they were appointed accordingly.

That George Wildes & Co. act under the advice and opinion of the Inspectors and their (George Wildes & Co's) solicitors, in all matters of their Estate.

That George Wildes & Co. be entirely governed by the opinions of the Inspectors, as to what amount in hand shall be sufficient to make a payment on account to the Creditors, and so from time to time.

That George Wildes & Co. whenever required by the Inspectors, call a Meeting of their Creditors.

That the advice and opinion of the majority in number of the Inspectors shall be deemed the advice and opinion of all of them.

It is the opinion of the Meeting that it is desirable that all Creditors of an amount not exceeding £100 in open account, or in any single Bill of £100, be forthwith paid.

That the Bill holders be recommended to present and protect their Bills in the usual way, and to send out their protests and take such steps as will secure their recourse on other parties to the Bills, but to retain their Bills in this country for the present.

That a copy of the above be sent by Geo Wildes & Co. to all their Creditors not present at this Meeting, and with such statement and explanation as to their affairs as they shall think necessary for their fuller understanding thereof.

It was moved by Mr. Alderman Thomson, seconded by Frederick Huth, Esq. and carried unanimously.

That the Meeting should not break up without their expressing the high opinion they have of the honorable and worthy conduct of George Wildes & Co. in the arduous situation in which they have for the last four months been placed.

(Signed) J. HORSLEY PALMER.
Chairman.

Moved by Mr. Bates that the thanks of this Meeting be expressed in the strongest manner to the Chairman, J. Horsley Palmer, Esq. for his unwearied exertions during the past four months, to which the commercial community were greatly indebted, and which had tended materially to alleviate the public inconvenience of the suspension of the three Houses that has lately occurred.

A resolution accordingly was seconded by Mr Cryder, and carried unanimously.

CANTON PRESS,

16th December, 1837.

Though a great many vessels are expected to arrive, and over due, we have no arrivals to announce during the week expecting two rice-ships from Java and Lombock. We are consequently without any foreign news, and our communication with Macao has been also very scanty during the week, our last news from that part of the coast being of the 11th.

The letters per Vesuvius were at last delivered on the 10th. It appears from a circular sent round on that day, that though they had been forwarded from Macao in a Chinese fast boat as early as the 25th October, the boatman delivered his trust only on the day before mentioned. The fault in this instance is therefore not to be attributed to the Postmaster, but rather to the interruption of the regular Passage usuis, which renders the employment of such unsafe means of communication, as chinese fast boats are necessary.

A party of about 25 foreigners went on Tuesday last to the City-gate to deliver a representation to the Governor respecting a robbery committed several years back on the river, of property belonging to a British resident here (Mr. Innes) and for which the latter, though he has repeatedly applied to the Governor, has as yet received no satisfaction. The chief or the accused party has been apprehended, and is still, we believe, in prison, but owing to the ship, whence the goods were delivered to the Chinese who kept them to his own use, not being here, to enable her officers to prove the delivery, the Chinese Judges have hitherto deemed the evidence inconclusive. Soon after the arrival of the party at the City-gate the Quang-hoep arrived, who was afterwards joined by the Nam-hoy-yune and another officer of rank with a red button; the Hong-merchant Mow-qua also was there, when, in order to receive the representation, the Chinese officers insisted on it's being handed to them through Mow-qua. To this Mr. Innes objected as being contrary to precedent, petitions to the Governor having on former occasions been received by the Quang-hoep direct from the foreigners. A lengthened discussion arose on this subject, and Mow-qua also was by the officers requested to attend, who tried to persuade Mr. Innes to give up his point. This gentleman would not however listen to these remonstrances, and it was at last proposed that the Nam-hoy-yune and other Chinese officer should go and consult the Governor himself on this point. They accordingly went, and soon returned, stating that it was the Governor's express order that the letter should be received through the hands of a Hong-merchant only. After consulting with his party, Mr. Innes determined, under these circumstances, not to deliver his letter at all, and the foreigners left the gate after a discussion that had lasted about two hours. We believe that Mr. Innes, in his perseverance in the delivery of his letter to officers of the Government only, acted in part on the suggestion of Capt. Elliot, who, when here, had tried to recover the stolen property, but who, having now no communication with the local Government, can of course no longer personally move in this case.

The Vice-roy seems to have been much annoyed with this affair having immediately after issued an edict prohibiting foreigners from coming to the City-gate with representations for the future, and threatening, we believe, not having yet been able to obtain a complete translation of it, with punishment, if any one should dare to act contrary to this order.

His Excellency has however soon been made to perceive that the foreigners here were not at all likely, without contest, to relinquish a privilege, the only one which was likely to keep in check the encroachments of the Co-hong on them, and the creditors of Hing-tae having got up another representation to the Governor, of which copy will be found below proceeded yesterday again to the City-gate to offer it to the Quang-heep. The party on arriving found the outer gate shut, and were obliged therefore to wait outside, instead of staying as usual in the space between the inner and outergate. Here they were made to wait a long time, when at last the Quang-heep with two other officers and a large retinue made his appearance, and addressed Mr. S. Fearon, the interpreter on this occasion, apparently in a great rage, threatening him with punishment for not having properly explained to his countrymen the warning he had given them the last time, not again to appear at the City-gate. This apparent passion and violent rebuke was probably got up for effect to high on his importance in the eyes of an admiring rabble, for, when he was afterwards prevailed on to allow the foreigners to come within the outer gate, his deportment became more civil, and he then received the letter from the hands of How-qua. We are glad to perceive that Hingtae's creditors are determined to push their claims with the local authorities as much as possible, and should not wonder if the next answer from the Governor were to be a very uncivil one, though we hope that H. E. will little by little become aware of the responsible nature of his government in this affair, and that the foreign creditors are not likely to sit down quietly under a loss against which a great government had guaranteed them.

To H. E. the Governor of the two Kwang provinces, a respectful address.

We received on the 2d inst. from the Hong-merchants copy of an edict bearing your Excellency's name, but fear we do not exactly understand your Excellency's meaning, in as far as our claims upon the Hingtae-Hong are mixed with transactions of a totally different nature, and our trade threatened to be stopped if Capt. Elliot does not perform what we have no power to insist upon.

Your Excellency's repeated promises that our debts shall be paid to the uttermost mite have as yet produced us nothing but the most unreasonable proposition on the part of the Co-hong, to pay our debts in 15 years. The usual interest alone, would far exceed the payment; how therefore can such be considered as anything but a flagrant act of disobedience to your Excellency's edicts?!

Your Excellency draws very justly a distinction between the personal treatment that may be due to a fraudulent bankrupt, and that which should be shewn to the sureties; but in the payment of a debt the sureties take the place of the bankrupt in every respect. We are far from wishing to distress the members of the Co-hong (already so encumbered) but we must remind your Excellency of the establishment of a fund for the express purpose of meeting such engagements, and which fund, having had no legitimate drain on it for the past three years, while is has been regularly levied on the foreign trade, should now have accumulated to a very large sum. But when large sums are annually exacted by the various officers of Government, how is it possible that trade can go on?

We have been involved in these debts by trading with the merchants specially appointed by the Emperor for the avowed purpose of guarantying foreign debts and guarding them against fraud, and with whom alone we are permitted to carry on such business. If now we are put off from month to month, where is the use of such an appointed set of merchants, and where the essential justice which, in restricting our trade to a few men, preventing our dealing with others, yet refuses either to perform it's own engagements, or to compel the Hong-merchants to perform theirs? We may here remark that the only wealthy members of the Co-hong will neither secure ships nor purchase their cargoes!

We are thus compelled to call most solemnly on your Excellency not to permit the Celestial [illegible] lence and justice to be thus rendered nugatory, but that something more than mere promises and examinations will speedily be carried into effect.

We have the honor to be,

Your Excellency's,

Most obedients servants,

Signed by Hing-tae Creditors.

We recopied last week from the Calcutta papers, some articles relating to the state of affairs in the Burman Empire. Nothing certain seems to be known as to the new King of Ava's intentions towar ls the company, but the belief that they are hostile seems to be gaining ground. Should the Company again be involved in a Burmese war, it's result, though probably very expensive, would no doubt be in favor of the British arms. Whether the Chinese Empire will, as formerly, remain an inactive spectator in this conflict, remains to be seen, and it is not impossible that the relations between the Chinese and British may thereby be considerably influenced. We hear little now of the controul exercised by China over that part of India and the Malayan Peninsula, though some centuries back, it was paramount, and the chiefs of the various countries in their occasional difficulties sought redress at Pekin. Witness the execution of the Portuguese Ambassador Pires, on account of his countrymen having deprived the Rajah of Malacca of his territory.

We have been favored by the author with a copy of Mr. G. T. Lay's address to his countrymen, having for it's object the planting out of the Bonin Islands as a convenient spot for the carrying on an unmolested trade with the Japanese Archipelago and China, should the latter country persevere in it's antisocial restrictions to the intercourse we are now suffered to hold with her people. We have not just now where to refer to for the history of the discovery of these Islands, which for some time were inhabited by a few English, shipwrecked on that coast, but we suppose there would be no opposition made by any one to the re-occupation of these Islands by the British, being at the present moment, we believe, totally uninhabited. It is much to be regretted that Mr. Lay, in his address, does not enter into a description of them behaving had an opportunity of seeing them when attached to Capt. Beechy's expedition, to inform us whether the Islands themselves are capable of producing sufficient food for a populous Colony, or whether for this, the colonists must depend on the neighbouring countries; and whether they are easily accessible to shipping, and afford secure anchorage. On these important subjects this short letter gives us no information. We are aware that the stirring of such questions as propose; by Mr. Lay cannot but be of advantage, and we thank him therefore for having directed the public attention to it, though to us it appears that the distance from China of the Bonin Islands is too great, to admit of a settlement there to derive much advantage from the Chinese trade. Their position besides being due east from the trading provinces of China, and Chinese vessels not being constructed to encounter boisterous and adverse winds, which they would be sure to find on going to these Islands during the greatest part of the year but few would be venturous enough, we fear to run, on acquaintance with this new settlement which could in no case offer them such great convenience than they now enjoy in going to Singapore a port which, though somewhat more distant is always easy of access, and from whence they return with as much ease and as little danger on the change of the monsoon. Besides the Chinese would always find their commercial necessities supplied more easily at Singapore than at any more northern place, where the produce of the tropical regions is not brought to market. As to the trade with the Japanese Islands being carried on from thence, this might perhaps take place, though the Japanese prohibitory laws might militate against this likewise particularly since the subjects of Japan are not permitted to build vessels capable of enduring long sea voyages. We do not on these accounts, therefore enter on the anticipations of Mr. Lay, that this colony once established, would alter the tone of the Chinese authorities towards us, or that we could hope with any reasonable chance of success, in case of foreigners being driven out of China, to induce the Chinese to follow us to Bonin with their produce, for which they would find an easier and more certain market in Singapore, with which they have now been long acquainted. If Islands near China are to be colonized with a view to prosecute trade, we should wish that some nearer the continent were chosen, when there would be greater probability of success.

We have on several occasions remarked on the want of cleanliness with which the space in front of the factories is kept. Some short time ago there seemed to be a pretty strict superintendence, and we might then walk without encountering disgusting objects at every step. Now however it has become again the practice of the coolies belonging to the foreign factories to carry all the dung and filth from the houses just into their front and there deposit them, although by taking the trouble of walking a few steps further on they would find boats stationed at the bank of the river, destined to receive all such refuse. We would recommend to masters of houses to order their compradores to make the coolies carry these nuisances to where they ought to be deposited and not allow them to pile them up on the only spot that is allotted us for recreation. This is easily done and would deserve the thanks of the community.

drinking in England in 1757.

"To what can we ascribe the numerous complaints which prevail? How many sweet creatures of your sex languish with a weak digestion, low spirits, lassitudes, nervous chiefs, and twenty disorders, which, in spite of the faculty, have yet no names, except the general one of nervous complaints? Let them change their diet, and among other articles, leave off drinking tea. It is more than probable the greatest part of them will be restored to health."

"Hot water is also very hurtful to the teeth. The Chinese do not drink their tea so hot as we do, and yet they have bad teeth. This cannot be ascribed entirely to sugar, for they use very little, as already observed; but we all know that hot or cold things which pain the teeth, destroy them also. If we drank less tea, and used gentle acids for the gums and teeth, particularly sour oranges, though we had a less number of French dentists, I fancy this essential part of beauty would be much better preserved.

"The women in the United Provinces, who sip tea from morning till night are also as remarkable for bad teeth. They also look pallid, and many are troubled with certain feminine disorders arising from a relaxed habit. The Portuguese ladies, on the others hand, entertain with sweetmeats, and yet they have very good teeth: but their food in general is more of a farinaceous and vegetable kind than ours. They also drink cold water instead of sipping hot, and never taste any fermented liquors; for these reasons the use of sugar does not seem to be at all pernicious to them."

"Men seem to have lost their stature and comeliness, and women their beauty. I am not young, but methinks there is not quite so much beauty in this land as there was. Your very chambermaids have lost their bloom, I suppose by sipping tea. Even the agitations of the passions at cards are not so great enemies to female charms. What Shakspeare ascribes to the concealment of love, is in this age more frequently occasion by the use of tea."

The rumours we mentioned as having been afloat last week, of a ship having been seen near St. John's, keel uppermost, and of another having been seen or shore to the westward, have not been confirmed, and there is we think, no credit due to them. The vessels mentioned in our last as due from Singapore, the Ariel, Lady Hayes, Theodore, Ternate, Duke of Sussex, Lady Grant, and Sir Charles Malcolm, still keep out.

The Duke of Sussex, was seen in Lat. north about 15deg, during a heavy gale, having lost her mizen top-mast, by the Amer. ship Asia; a vessel answering the Ariel, in description, was seen at the same time, and it is supposed that they must have gone for shelter into Manila bay, from whence we have had no arrivals for some time.

The dutch Schooner Maria Friederika, expected from Lombock, had sailed thence 8 days before the Pleiades came away, and has not arrived.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS, continue in good demand. COTTON YARN. No sales reported and no enquiry.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, the market is rather heavier, but we have heard of no sales. LONGELLS, have again advanced a little. CAMBLETS. English and Dutch without improvement. About 500 Ps. of the latter have been sold during the week,—narrow—at from $ 21 @ 21. Some very fine CLOTHS, have been sold at $ 3¼ per yard.

METALS.—IRON, much wanted, particularly the small rod-iron. LEAD, quotation much the same, but the demand not so active.

RICE,—without alteration.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, has been selling at our quotation, but there is not so much demand for it. BETELNUT, commands readily 3½ @ 3¾ for good. TIN, is heavy of sale, and there have been one or two considerable accessions to our stock during the week.

COTTON.—Although the stock is so very short, and there have been no further arrivals, a further decline has taken place in all descriptions of 2 @ 3 mace, and there is little or no demand. No sale has been effected of any of the Madras cotton yet.

OPIUM.—The market continues in much the same state, with a decline rather, parties being anxious to realise.

The deliveries to the 8th were, Patna new, 95; Malwa 97½; Total 192½ Chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—The market not yet opened, and the Silk-men are asking our quotations, but which no one is inclined to give. There is no encrease to the quantity brought down, say 3,500 bales.

TEA.—We have quoted prices of a few of the black teas, which are the only ones we are yet enabled to give. We do not hear that any prices for the green teas have yet been settled, nor for the low black leaf Congous.

VOL. 3d. No. 16. CANTON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER, 23RD, 1837. No. 120

THE DAYAKS OF BORNEO.

From the Singapore Free Press 9th November.

On leaving Lomar, after travelling a few miles, our correspondent came to a stream of water, and in its bed seated himself on a bowlder, and for a few moments indulged in contemplations so pleasing that for a time he forgot the toil of clambering up steep ascents To see a rock of any kind would have afforded him, he says, particular pleasure then, not having met with one for upwards of six months—but here were the grey wacke, the boroblend, the stratified quartz with its variegated front, and several others, old friends with which he delighted to sport in more youthful days. On the right was the stream tumbling in form over the rocks which lay in its course On the left the view opened out into a small plain in a valley, where were standing the thatched huts of a few Chinese miners, around which were their little gardens—and in the rear of these were the mines from which these sons of industry were deriving their subsistence. and hoping in time to acquire wealth and return to their mother country. Beyond the valley which soon opened into an extended plain, arose the lofty Barang range from one of which the Mempawa river takes its rise. Behind was the steep declivity which he had just descended, and before him lay one of the points of the Bayang, on the top of which stood the Dayak village which he wished to visit. After a short pause he commenced his ascent and in about an hour gained the top. The prospect from the village was truly enchanting. A broad valley lay below, variegated with dense forests and woodless plains, with here and there a shining spot of red clay or white sand where the Chinese had removed the earth in searching for gold. Beyond the valley was an extensive forest, with hills rising over hills and mountains piled on mountains till they seemed at length to mingle with the distant clouds. It was melancholy however to reflect that this spacious amphitheatre held in its bosom, shrouded in its forests and hills, several thousands of immortal beings hastening to eternity and as ignorant of their own destiny, as the people of more civilized regions are of their existence and conditions—literally sitting in the "Region of the valley of the shadow of Death"—each living in constant fear, by day and night that his own trunkless head will take that place in a neighbour's hut which many a one now occupies in his. Having visited about 100 families of the Dayaks our correspondent returned to Lomar. Those Dayaks he saw were all miserably poor and diseased—but even thus, the Malay rajahs who claim authority over them, make no scruple in quartering themselves and followers upon them so long as they find pleasure to remain, and that too without remuneration.

The inhabitants of one of the villages he came to had just taken three heads and, the feasting and beating of gongs were continuing when he arrived. The skulls having sufficiently steamed their owners were then taking the round among the neighbours to inspire them with courage to undertake a similar expedition. Thus it is that the "powers of darkness" contrive to make the commission of one sin lead on to that of another, and to perpetuate barbarous and cruel systems on the earth. Our correspondent tried to convince the Dayaks of the folly and wickedness of their conduct, and to point to the Saviour of men as their only friend; but they manifested too great an attachment to their old customs to give much attention to what he said. Indeed it is not strange that it should be so, for the custom of cutting off heads is instilled in their minds from very infancy. About the first thing that is taught the infant is to resent injury, real or imaginary, and to obtain its own will

He observed in this village that very many were afflicted with purulent opthalmia, and many others with ulcers of various kinds

In passing the place of their Pantaks, (images) he stopped to examine them. There were at one place about forty, and from their appearance a person would judge that they had been deserted, for some years. They are figures carved into something like the human form, having usually some ornaments attached to their necks, arms, &c. Those representing males have their hands raised in a menacing posture, and those representing females have theirs hanging by their sides to represent submission. These Pantaks have been considered as idols and as receiving worship—but our friend is satisfied that this is an entire mistake. They are the representations of ancestors only, and offerings are placed before them as such and not as deities. The Dayaks make offerings of the entrails of fowls &c. in a cup placed on split bamboo in front of their houses, but whether these are intended for a holy or unholy spirit it is difficult to say, as God and the Devil are both called by the same name, and the making these offerings is probably the whole extent of their worship.

As our correspondent arrived at Ledo on his return, the Pangeran was just starting on circuit. He had about 25 Malay followers armed with muskets, spears &c. and about as many Dayaks, pressed to carry the luggage &c One of them carried on his back a huge chair in which the rajah takes his seat when weary of walking.

The following are a few miscellaneous remarks regarding the Dayaks. When they attack a hostile village in good earnest they spare neither age nor sex—the hoary head and the helpless infant, the daring warrior and the retiring female, even tho' adorned with beauty and youth are alike slaughtered and beheaded with savage joy. There is an exception however in the case of a young and handsome female, who if she have the courage to appear before the murderers of her relatives in the simple attire of nature, is valued more than a skull; her life is spared and she follows her captor, sometimes not unwillingly, especially if he has one or more heads to carry with him, even tho' they were taken from her nearest relatives! It is also said to be the practice of all the Dayaks in this region to put great confidence in the omens given by a certain bird; these are consulted on all occasions of going to war or making peace—when they plant or when they reap.

However it may have been the fact formerly, it is not now insisted on in these parts that a Dayak shall not marry until he has decapitated one or more heads—tho' no one will presume to ask in marriage the daughter of a man who has several skulls in his possession, until he himself has taken one at least.

Wives are not bought; but selected from personal regard, and when a Dayak marries, it is for life; tho' separations sometimes occur. When a marriage is agreed upon, it is performed in the following manner. The parties and their friends being assembled, the couple seat themselves on a rice trough, side by side, and the person who acts as priest takes the blood of several fowls and sprinkles some of it before them; some is put on the foreheads of each with a feather, and some is thrown into the air, the priest calling on Jubata to sanction the engagement. After this some advice is given to the pair, and the whole closes with feasting. The term Jubata is supposed to refer to God, but it is at least equally certain that it signifies Devil also. They have an idea that there is an invisible spirit, who is the author of good and evil—it is he who favors or destroys their crops—who sends sickness or health —who gives success in head-hunting, or permits enemies to take off their heads.

When a Dayak dies, the corpse is disposed of as follows, according to the rank of the deceased. If the person has been rich or a warrior and taken many heads, the body is burnt and the ashes left to be scattered by the wind—a pantak representation duly ornamented, is set up in the proper place, and sacrificed to at their common family festivals. When a person dies who has been noted for his skill in driving away evil spirits, the corpse is placed in the top of some tree in order that the spirit may more speedily take its flight to the skies. The common people are rolled up in their clothes, inclosed in bark, and buried. Others again who have been despicable during life, are merely laid at the foot of some tree and left to be devoured by wild beasts.

In regard to headseeking, our correspondent believes the practice is far less common,—at least on the west side of Borneo,—than formerly. From what he saw, he thinks there are comparatively few heads taken now; probably there are not many villages that captures more than one or two a year. Indeed, he believes there are more Malays murdered in Sambas by their own race than are killed by the Dayaks. The Dayak kills his enemy, but the Malay murders his neighbour, even the wife of his bosom, and justifies himself in so doing by appealing to the laws of his prophet.

REGULATIONS OF BUDDHIST CONVENTS IN CHINA.

31. "Those who struggle and wrangle to be the first in giving to the poor or needy."—The object of this rule seems to be, to prevent jealousies among the fraternity, from one pushing himself forward in this good work, as if he wished it to be thought, that his brethren were all void of humanity, and that he only felt for the needy.

32. "Those who pick up lost articles, and do not bring them to be inserted in the treasury list' (to wait for the right owner.")

33. "Those who clandestinely go to beg, and by the influence of persons not resident in the monastery, get themselves introduced to the founder (or chief supporter) of the institution to beg." There are many of the monasteries and religious establishments of China, founded and richly endowed by secular persons, merchants, statesmen, and others; and their heirs, though they have no claim whatever to the property thus devoted, and no authority over the monastery, yet inherit a certain degree of respect, and are considered as a sort of honorary members of that institution, of which their ancestors were the founders.

34 "Those who give of the common property to others, and those who seize on others people's property."

35. "Those who form connexions with the white-clothed people; or who take persons without-side, as their father, mother, and sisters; or who devote themselves to a priestess, as their KAN NEANG; i. e. "DAY-LADY."—The priests wear dun-coloured garments, nearly resembling those worn by the priests of the same sect in Ceylon—The common people they call "white-clothed people," because their garments are often white. The nuns, or priestesses, are called—"DAY-LADIES," from the circumstance of their celebacy, not bearing children, and consequently, NOT "GIVING SUCK." The nature of the evils, here reprobated, is not very clear. The whole fraternity of bonzes, as has already been remarked, renounce parents, brethren, and all earthly relations; but it seems they afterwards half-repent; and as they cannot again resume the natural relations which they rejected, they try to substitute others in their place —AGAINST this the laws of the fraternity are directed.

36. "Those who enter into brotherhoods, or form associations, that are dangerous to the public peace."

37. "Those who act as they list, without informing their superiors and their brethren."

38. "Those who do not make vows."—It appears to be a general practice among the Buddhist priests to make vows—perhaps to sit so many days in perfect silence, without moving; or to offer a certain number of prayers to some idol; or to repeat the name of Buddha, so many myriads of times; or to make a road for the ANTS, through a pond, or a wet place, that they may not be drowned; or to buy and set free some animal that might otherwise be killed.

39. "Those who do not" compassionate the young."

40. "Those who do not pity the aged and sick."

41. "Those who are self-confident and presumptous, pushing themselves always into notice."

These are the FORTY-ONE causes of exclusion from the communion of the Buddhistic bonzes. The reader may, at leisure, compare Pagan and Christian monachisms, and then form his own judgment. In the remaining part of the work, the author; the interior regulations; the authority, state, and attendants, of the superior, or abbot, of the convent; rules for the management of the general store, or treasury; treatment of strangers; regulations for the meals and religious services of the bonzes; laws of the hospital; rules for issuing supplies, and managing the lands, and other endowments; admonitions about love and hatred—kindness to the aged, sick, poor, extravagance, the faults of others, indulgence of the previous; rules for, and advantages of, quiet and meditation,—are severally treated. Some very curious and interesting extracts might be given from these various particulars; but the limits of this department are already exceeded. At some future period, perhaps, it may be practicable to furnish a short paper on the subject of this one. For the present, we shall but just give the names of the several departments of the convent, and of the persons who hold them. The DEPARTMENTS are the hall, the cloisters, the abbot's house, the common stranger's chamber, the stranger priest's lodging, the hospital, the dispensary, the barber's shop, the treasury, the dining hall, the hall where the bell and drum are placed, the penitent's cloister, the cook house, the printing office, the book-shop, the garden, the temple, &c. There are, no doubt, many others not here enumerated; but these are sufficient to shew that comfort, rather than mortification, has been studied in the plan of these institutions.

The OFFICERS are, the abbot, the vice-abbot, the resident priest, the person who receives and treats common strangers, the waiters, (i. e. those who attend on the superiors) the servants, the young messengers, the president of the convent, the vice-president of ditto, the treasurer, the superintendents of the cloisters, the master of the hall, the head of the side passages, the master of order and ceremony, the butler, the tailor, the doctor, the manager of the convent, the store-keeper, the gardener; these, together with the priests, generally constitute the residents in a Chinese convent.

ANECDOTES.

Jackson the barrister, driving in his stanhope, to dine at Twickenham, got into a quarrel with a dustman who blocked up the road. "What did the fellow do to you?" said Jane, at dinner afterwards. "Do," said Jackson "why the rascal wanted to throw his dust in my eyes." "Very impudent indeed," said Smith, "considering you were a King's counsel, nothing could be so vexatious as professional cleanliness."

A broad fiend.—A person in business in a northern town of Ireland, who is accustomed, in the shape of an advertisement,—"The subscriber hereby informs the public that unless immediate payment is made of the accounts due to him, he will be under the disagreeable necessity of incurring expenses, which he feels anxious to avoid, if possible." The delicate touch at the conclusion must surely outwardle the unfortunate debtor to the previous hint. We recollect an old schoolmaster who used to thrash unmercifully, repeating all the time, "Are you not ashamed, you rascal, at giving me this trouble every day?"—Inverness Courier.

Aid to memory.—A labouring man went to church to confess, and among other things accused himself of having beaten his wife.—And why, my son, asked the priest, did you commit so heinous an offence? "I am in the habit of doing it," answered the penitent, "having so bad a memory, that with the very best will, I cannot recollect the sins I have been guilty of, and therefore, as soon as I begin catechising my wife, she abuses me and reproaches me with all the sins I have committed ever since we were married; thus only, reverend father, and at little cost, am I enabled to unburthen my soul by a general confession."

SHOAL IN THE PALAWAN PASSAGE.

EXTRACT FROM THE LOGBOOK OF THE ARGYLL, CAPTAIN SANDYS.

On the 12th November at ½ past 9 A. M., saw coral rocks close under the ship's bottom with not more than 4 or 5 fms. water upon them. Hove in stays, and while going about, the ship's head appeared to be close down upon the rocks. Having no lead line in the chains, did not think of sounding at the time, but after running cast 3 miles, the water still continuing discoloured, luffed the ship up in the wind, and got a cast of the deep-sea lead and had 27 fms., coral. Lat. brought back from noon, by observation, 11°,,00' N., Long. by chronometer by two sets of good sights, 117°,,37' east having steered due east from the time of being upon the shoal.

CORRESPONDECE.

Ship ANA, Whampoa. Dec. 13th 1837.

Dear Sir,—I have just received your note of the 12th in which you request a short account of my passage up from Java and the vessels that I saw.—I left Java on the 14th October and proceeded by the Palawan passage and after getting to Lat. 12 N. began to experience heavy gales from the northd. On the 16th November we encountered a typhoon, a regular roarer, there was no mistake about it; harder it could not blow, and although I have had the happiness of experiencing two different ones at Lintin and the Cum-sing-Moon before, this was more terrible than both. It came on a little after dark from the northd., with but little warning. I had things pretty well secured, sails all furled with double gaskets but a close reefed main top sail, before it came on very violent, but long before it blew any thing like a typhoon, the top sail, although a new sail, had gone in shreds. It continued to blow with great violence till midnight, when all of a, once it fell a dead calm, leaving of course the sea on, and in a short time a heavy sea coming against it from the S. S. W., the ship was now perfectly unmanageable; not the least wind, and the sea going all over her in every direction, not even sprays, but heavy pyramidical seas; it was impossible for any one to keep the deck, she was all full with the rail, and the only safe place was in the rigging. The barometer was now down to 29,60 and falling rapidly; a total darkness all above, the sea as it were on fire, rendering the scene truly pyramidal, and for which I made some allowed by a very uncomfortable kind of fright-ener. Things continued in this state some two hours, when it began to clear in the opposite quarter to a typhoon then, all at once, and such a dreadful time it is impossible to describe; the two seas impinging each other, broke all over her, as she lay on her beam ends from one sea, before another hailed against her; the sails were began to fly from the yards through the gaskets into shreds, and, as the ship was much pressed, I began to think it impossible for the masts to stand it long, or the ship to keep above water, but happily no harm did not last above three hours, which it moderated. At the commencement of the typhoon, there were two vessels in company, one not a mile to windward, and the other a short distance to leeward, and we were in constant dread during the whole night of meeting in contact. One of them was a low straight barque, clipper looking, the other a barque of 10 or 1200 tons, with poops on her main topsail. I saw this large vessel, a day after the blow, with her sky pilots reefed main sail and main top sail yards, and three topmast gaffs standing on the mast, either a three day sail with a moderate breeze from the eastward, or a steamer, there were no other vessels in sight, as far as the eye could see, except a few small craft, which I took to be the shipping on some shoal I was evidently near of them. The gale lasted 36 hours when it moderated, and I reached up the coast of Luconia on Cape Bajador and proceeded across for China, but when up with the Pratas shoal experienced another heavy gale from the northd., by which a reefed fore sail blew away, and I then lay to 4 days with a tremendous sea, after which I made sail for the Lemon Islands, and was enabled to get from Cape Bajador, when fell in with the Argyll, Capt Sandys. Then fell in with the Argyll, Capt Sandys. Therefore leaving up the coast, and passed about very soon after. After experiencing such heavy gales, in succession from the northd., with loss of regular sea, we reached the Grand Ladrone without any material accident to the ship or cargo.

Respectfully your obedient servant,
WILLIAM GOLD.

Also Mr. Editor,—Are our eyes as open as to demand, are our hearts as warm to be gladdened by the sight of the "stripey flag of England" as on some former day, upon which our daily communication to the "free and honorable" was to be seen in front of the British factory, and only second in size to that of the Stars and Stripes, but rendering to our minds the glorious doubt that it was the former flag under that proud banner. Alas! I am afraid it is even so, and the naked flag itself is likely to remain as a monument of the egregious folly of our Lord Palmerston and his evil counsellors, tho' I have little doubt, that it will be of quite as much use as it's past now, as his Lordship can be as it is. And who hath dared to do this deed?

"They that have done this deed are honorable"

They are wise and honorable

And will no doubt with sweet answers you"

Oh for a forty-Palmerston-power to shout thy praise a hundred!!! Has the green eyed Hunt-ite, the Machiavel of the council of treasury, taken hold in hand it? has he not outwitmagged, humbug?

* * * *

Also Mr. Editor,—We have had our ears ago, our London ago, our age of chivalry, our golden age, (that I am certain is past) and now we have the age of humbug, the very air we breathe is impregnated with humbug.—We live in an atmosphere of humbug. But,

"I would rather be a toad

"And live upon the vapour of a dungeon" than live in such an atmosphere, or would myself to the fashion of the times in that respect.

"Oh judgment thou art fled to brutish beasts

"And men have lost their reason"

Lovers of your country mourn for her fallen state, her honour lowered, her hearts torn. It was not thus in days gone by—but now a days the wounds of British honour are healed by peasants, not by the blood of her enemies.

I am Mr. Editor,

Your obedient Servant,
RUPERT.

THE HING-TAE AFFAIRS.

Below will be found the Governor's answer to the representation made to him by Hing-tae's creditors, of which we gave copy in our last, and from which it will be seen that the creditors are as far as ever from receiving payment, or even from settling the mode in which such payment is to be made. The hong merchants had made an offer to pay within fifteen years by annual instalments, nor does the Governor apparently think this offer an unjust one to the creditors, and again expatiates on the hardships which the hong merchants are made to suffer by paying the debts of one of their body. It is undoubtedly a hardship to suffer in pocket for another's fault, but the merchants, when entering the Co-hong are aware of their mutual responsibility, which they take upon themselves on consideration of the advantages they hope to reap from becoming participators in the monopoly of the foreign trade, and have consequently by no means been led unawares into this misfortune. Let us ask, who is placed in a situation of the most hardship, whether the creditors of Hing tae, and through him, of the Co-hong, or the hong merchants themselves, who are now only called upon to perform part of a contract deliberately entered into on becoming members of the Co-hong. The creditor, on the contrary, trusted a member of this corporation established by the Government, because the restrictive measures of the government precluding other native dealers, compelled them so to do, and they though, that they might do so with safety knowing that, by the laws of the Empire, the Co-hong as a body was liabe for the debts of each of it's members, and looking besides, as a Government establishment, upon the government itself as ultimate security, in case of failure from the Co-hong. Now the creditors of Hing-tae demanding a settlement of their account from the Governor, having failed to obtain it from the security merchants, they are told that it is unreasonable to expect payment within a reasonable time, that the hong merchants deserve compassion, and that the demands of the creditors are vexatious and cannot be allowed. The Governor seems to lose sight altogether of the position of Hing-tae's creditors. he forgets, that they, being kept out of their property which they confided on the special understanding of the whole body of the Co-hong guarantying it's payment, are much more wronged than the Co-hong can be by paying Hing-tae's debts, and that they consequently most deserve the heavenly care and compassion, the chinese are so fond of bestowing in words, though seldom in deed.

The Governor even holds out a threat that the Hong-merchants, if pressed too hard for payment, may throw off their responsibility altogether, an act to which such hints from the government will probably render them inclined, and H. E. then exultingly asks, what then, in such an emergency foreigners could do to recover their money!

This remark of the Governor's ought not to be lost sight of, and we should like to see a general meeting of Hing-tae's creditors convened to deliberate on the line of conduct now to be followed by them, since it is plain, from the correspondence hitherto carried on on the subject with the authorities, that this will lead to no result. We should think that the only mode of proceeding now left to the creditors is to collect whatever relates to their debts, and to lay their claims, through H. M. Superintendent, before Her Majesty's government, asking them for protection against this unjust evasion of their demands by the local authorities of Canton. Several gentlemen, creditors of Hing-tae, are, we hear, about to return to England, let the creditors intrust them with the office of stimulating the home-government to active exertion in protecting their subjects in China, and let the creditors, after those steps shall have been taken, acquaint the Governor Tung with what has been done. This may perhaps produce some immediate good effect, but cannot fail in the end to obtain justice for the claimants.—We hear that within the last few days the Hong merchants have made offers to pay the Hing-tae debts within twelve years, by annual instalments; this offer has naturally been rejected as not being even equal to the current interest here, and by this mode of promised payment, only an annual interest equal to 8 per cent would be received during of twelve years, if the Hong merchants keep their promise, for which there is no guarantee whatever, after which the whole capital would be lost. We believe that most of the creditors would agree to a payment of the debt by annual instalments within 6 years, bating all interest, and this having being mentioned to the Hong merchants, we hear that their answer was, that, if forced to make payment in that manner, they would all be obliged immediately to suspend payment altogether. This shows how little the creditors can expect from the hong merchants, backed, as they avowedly are, by the local government, in the offers of settlement they have hitherto made.

Tang, Vice-roy of Kwang-tung &c &c., proclaims to the Senior Hong-merchants for their full information.

Whereas on the 18th day of this moon (15th December, 1837) the foreign merchants, Jardine and others, having presented a petition to the following effect.—(Here follows copy of the petition.) —and this coming before me —I have accordingly examined and find, that in the laws of the heavenly Dynasty (it is thus written). "If a "man have received money improperly (such as "stolen money, bribes &c.) he ought to repay it to "it's rightful owner, or he may be sued and sent to "prison, for six months; if upon examination it be "found that with all his might, he cannot repay, "he may escape further prosecution, and on getting "a bond (from his friends,) certifying his inability "to pay &c., he may request forgiveness (of his "crime) and such like." Now Yenke-chang and his brother in owing a debt, have committed a much lighter crime than that of receiving bribes or stolen property, and they likewise being entirely unable to repay, it is plain, that their time of commencement in prison being expired, they also should be able to avoid further prosecution, and likewise sue for (and obtain) forgiveness! But I, the Viceroy, having still further ordered the Hong merchants to consult upon the subject, and to repay the debt in the stead (of the Bankrupts), am truly looking up to the holy virtue of the great Emperor as my model in fostering the men from afar, not wishing that the said foreigners should be deprived of their capital! This is goodness beyond the laws! truly may it be called the extreme of benevolence and justice! How is it then that so soon after the receipt of my reply (to your last petition) you again come with a mass of words thus whining at and annoying me! If you say that the Hong merchants who are to pay the debt instead (of the Bankrupt's) are in the place of the bankrupts, and as such are to be reprimanded for delay, then it is that the Hong merchants are blamed by you for coming forward to pay the debt.—so suppose that the Hong merchants were to beg of you to excuse them bearing this blame, and on the other hand were to agree together not to pay this debt, I would like to ask you, whom would you go to beg it from? Oh! gross and ignorant that ye are, never was there stupidity equal to this!

As to what you say about the Hong merchants having received the Consoo fund for three years without lifting arm (to pay any of it out) whether it is so or not, the Hong merchants must state the fact, and if the money was applied for the benefit of the public or if in (the Consoo Treasury) there is any excess or not, stop till the judge, and treasurer have examined and reported for my decision. As to whether the term or proposal to pay back in shares in fifteen years be too long or not, I again refer to my former edict, where I urged on the principal security merchants, without delay, to consult together in justice and determine with propriety. What will get the document from the judge and treasurer for my investigation.

In relation to a late petition of the said foreign merchants, because their petition contained the words, "We have heard that you mean to drive "out the Superintendent (Elliott) and not allow "the Ships to open their holds, we beg that in your "reply you give us some information upon this "point" therefore it was in order that they might clearly understand my edict in reply, I proclaimed that the two things had no connexion with each other, but the said foreigners having mixed up the two in begging for an answer to their petition as stated above, now turn upon me the Vice-roy, and borrow an excuse (to say that, I am) contradictory, and (mixing up things) far apart! This is indeed the most complete perverseness! (impertinence?)

I again issue this proclamation, and when it reaches the said senior security merchants, let them immediately enjoin it upon the said foreign merchants, that they may obey accordingly, and let them further command them, not again at their own will and pleasure thus foolishly present, (petitions?)

I, the Vice-roy, grasp the laws for the rooting up (&c. hoeing up) of vagabonds, if they make trials (of authority?) with me, I fear it will be difficult to deal lightly with them!!

Trouble at this! A special edict!

Taou kwang 17th year, 11th moon, 20th day,
(17th December, 1837.)

The following is the Vice-roy's Edict we mentioned last week as having been issued against representations being presented to the local Government at the city-gate.

Edict from the Governor against Foreigners presenting petitions at the city gates, Dated 13th Dec. 1-37.

(Translated by J. R. Morrison, Esq.)

Tung, Governor, &c. &c. issues these orders to the senior hong-merchants for their full information.

Since it was first permitted that, at Canton, the various foreign nations should enjoy commercial intercourse, the rule, in regard to all addresses made by any foreign merchant to the governor of this province on whatever subject, has been, that they should be presented through the medium of the senior hongmerchants; and the replies thereto, on due consideration made, it has been the rule to direct the senior hong merchants to enjoin on those concerned requiring their obedience thereof. This is an established statute of the celestial empire. And it is the course of proceeding that has long been in operation. And I, the governor, whenever any thing has come before me, have paid immediate attention to it. I have not in the least degree oppressed any by suffering cases to accumulate. Even in matters relating to hong merchants, the senior merchants aforesaid have in no instance concealed or failed to present addresses. The foreign merchants of every nation have come to Canton, trading for years past, and all of them assuredly have heard and known these facts. Right it is that they should for ever act with respectful obedience and attention!

But, of late, there have been foreign merchants who, desiring to effect changes in the old regulations, have, on every chance cause for addressing me, refused to entrust their addresses to the hands of the senior hongmerchants; and have even gone to the extreme proceeding of assembling in large numbers, and, flocking together, have taken their stand on the outside of the city-wall, foolishly hoping that officers will receive and present for them their addresses. What kind of would-be-clever scheme is this! Shall the statutes and laws of the celestial empire be changed at the bidding of outer barbarians! or, when addresses are presented through the medium of hong merchants, is the communication of a man's affairs to the high authorities at all impeded? Such conduct is indeed inexplicable! At this moment the Great Emperor's treatment of far-travelled men is most tender. His goodness is extreme. His justice is without a flaw. And I, the governor, humbly regarding and embodying his sacred virtues, have also continued to view all with equal benevolence. In all matters, I have myself acted. I have not caused the smallest obstruction to be interposed. But so for are they from bearing any sense of gratitude, so forgetful of their duty, and so perverse, that they will render themselves utterly intolerable to the royal laws; and what means of addressing me will then at all remain to them?

I proceed once again to state plainly the established rule, and earnestly and impressively to declare my commands. When these reach the senior hong merchants aforesaid, let them immediately enjoin the commands on the foreign merchants of the several nations, that they may obey the same. Henceforth, in presenting addresses on any subject, they are each and all imperatively required to follow implicitly the old-established regulations; and, having sealed their addresses, and plainly inscribed the date of them, they are to deliver them to the said senior hong merchants, for them to present. Thus they will gain a careful examination of the subject of address and plain and clear directions in reply. It is requisite that they should know, that the civil and military officers of the celestial empire have each their prescribed stations and duties; and that they assuredly will not, contrary thereto or doubtful thereof, venture to take charge of addresses to present them to me. Nor will I, the governor, permit them, in transgression of the laws, to take or receive any. Be careful not any more rashly and blindly to stir up trouble for yourselves, nor to involve yourselves in criminality.

In regard to the important locality of the city walls, outer barbarians are strictly forbidden to presume entering there. On this point the laws contain a special clause. If these foreign merchants, scheming to present their addresses, do not learn where to stay their onward advance, and dare to pass over into the forbidden city a single step, I the governor, will certainly maintain the laws, and proceeding against, will strictly apprehend them, and will clearly represent the facts to the throne, that punishment may be inflicted. The good and peaceful shall be treated with urbanity. The depraved shall be punished by the laws. It is impossible that all the foreigners should be disorderly and void of knowledge. There must be some able to make this distinction. Let them not say, then, that they did not receive timely forewarning.

With reference to the senior hong merchants, whenever they receive an address, they are imperatively required, on every occasion, to present the same immediately. If for the least instant they vexatiously delay, they shall be most severely subjected to investigation and reproof. Assuredly no indulgent forbearance shall be extended to them. Let every one, then, tremblingly obey. Let there be no opposition.—A special order. Taoukwang, 17th year, 11th month, 16th day. (13th Dec. 1837.)

In another column will be found a letter Capt. Cole of the American Ship Asia has favored us with, and which we regret came to hand too late for last week's paper. The barque which Capt. Cole describes as looking clipper like, and which he saw on the 16th November, we are inclined, from information derived from Capt. Sandys, to believe to have been the Argyle, since arrived here. The other barque damaged in her rigging must have been the Duke of Sussex, which vessel put into Manila to refit, and has since arrived here. The Lady Hope and Ternate had likewise gone to Manila to refit, and the latter left again for China on the 27th November.

Capt. Sandys of the Argyle has favored us with the description of the position of a shoal discovered by him in the Palawan passage, which will be found in another column.

It will be seen from the new advertisement of the Hon. E. I. Company's Agents, that they have reduced the exchange at which they granted advances on shipments of tea and silk from 4s. 7d. to 4s. 6d., thereby giving a hint that people were not so anxious to avail themselves of these advances as had been expected. Hitherto, we have heard, a very few chops of tea only have been advanced upon, and unless advices of the English market should improve very much, and there is no reason to expect it, we doubt whether even at the present reduced exchange, the Company will be able to get rid of the dollars now collected in their treasury, and we expect soon to hear of a further reduction. People have found out that the privilege of trading on the Company's money is a very expensive one.

Yesterday was the Chinese festival Tung-che, on which all accounts are settled, preparatory to their being finally paid on new year's eve. Doctor Morrison in his "View of China" has the following notice of this day.

"11th moon. The shortest day, or Tung-che, is called Chang-che-tsee. All officers of government, both civil and military, repair to Wan-show king, the Imperial hall; one of which is in every Provincial city, and make their prostrations to the Winter Solstice. Many make cakes, &c. with which they congratulate the Solstice on the returning sun. In the streets and markets there is a great concourse of people. The Term is otherwise called Tung-tsee. People settle their accounts."

After the decease of a Chinese, his relatives are, by means of astrology, led to fix on a propitious day for his funeral, and the body is frequently kept above the ground many months, before it is consigned to it's last rest. The Hong-merchant Kingqua died about two months ago, and last Monday was by his friends fixed upon for the burial. The body having to be embarked on the river, a temporary gateway had been erected of bamboo on the water's edge. This gate was a building of considerable size, containing, besides the passage, four large sized rooms. A smaller building, of one apartment only, had also been erected in front of the American Hong, containing the portrait of the deceased, and seats to accommodate his friends. At 7 o'clock in the morning the procession was seen to issue from old China street, and moving towards the gate already described. A large concourse of people had assembled to see the sight, and they as well as a double row of tables covered with fruit and sweetmeats formed a lane through which the procession passed. The order of the procession was as follows; First came, each carried in a kind of open sedan chair, borne by two coolies, fifty roasted pigs, with shining lacker-like-looking hides, symmetrically adorned with flowers; these were followed by a number of similar chairs with other eatables all equally embelished. Following these was a number of mourners whom we supposed to be the defunct's domestic servants. After these came a sedan chair containing the portrait of the dead, and following this another containing a board with the titles in which King-qua rejoiced while living. This chair was immediately followed by the deceased's friends, amongst whom we recognised several Hong-merchants and outside dealers as well as mandarins of no high rank; it had been expected that some high functionaries of the government would have been present, in compliment to the great literary rank held by one of the deceased's sons, but, owing to some cause or another they did not come. Last came the coffin, under a very handsome canopy of party colored silk, and following close behind it the chief-mourner, and other members of the family, dressed in sack cloth, unshaved and barefooted, or having at least no covering to the feet but straw sandals, such as are worn by the meanest Chinese, it being assumed that their grief ought to be so intense as to render them totally regardless of their personal appearance. The chief mourner appeared, according to the customary etiquette, so much weighed down by grief, that two servants had to support his tottering steps, and with this aid even he seemed really to sink to the ground at almost every step.

Within the apartment of the gate refreshments were offered to the friends of the deceased, who dispersed after the body had, under a salute of cannon, been deposited in the boat. After burial, and after their having been offered to the deities, the fifty pigs and other eatables before mentioned are distributed among the poor.

We have in this sketch of the procession omitted to mention its ornamental parts, such as a number of sachins beating cymbals and playing on wind instruments, dressed in cloaks, once magnificent no doubt, but now faded from frequent use, and of most dirt in scarlet jac[illegible] bearing the insignia of the magisterial and judicial offices, such as axes, swords, whips and rattans, all of whose personal appearance betrayed that they looked forward to the distribution of the eatables with no small degree of impatience. It is indeed impossible to see a more wretched, ragged, famished set of people, grown up as well as children, as those employed in funereal and marriage processions in China, from which we suppose that their services on these occasions are no otherwise rewarded than by the, on these days, never failing distribution of food.

We do not exactly see what our correspondent "Rupert" would be at. That, under present circumstances, the British flag has been hauled down, we see no reason to regret, nor do we doubt that the English Government, whenever there is cogent reason for it, will interfere to protect her subjects in China. We see no reason to assume that the Chinese are our enemies, nor can we at all understand how their treatment has wounded the honor of the British as to call for bloody retribution.

A meeting of the Committee of the General Chamber of Commerce was convened yesterday, when How-qua, Mow-qua, and Pwankeh-qua called at their office, to state that rumours were afloat of smuggling being carried on at Whampoa, which, if true would expose them to considerable risk. They informed the Chamber that, owing to these rumours, it would be necessary in future to have recourse to stricter measures in securing of the ships, and that the more tedious way of going through all the prescribed forms, many of which have hitherto, for the sake of despatch, been relaxed, would henceforth be resorted to. If the Hong-merchants adhere to this resolution, ships arriving at Whampoa will be delayed sometime ere they can begin discharging.

Several times correspondence has taken place with the local authorities about the Hospital ship we stationed at Whampoa, and the Governor has often insisted on her taking her homeward cargo and leaving the port. To this it has been objected that the ship, being no longer seaworthy, no cargo could be shipped in her, nor could she return to her country. In answer to this the Governor has ordered that the ship should be broken up and her timber, stores etc., sold to the natives. Within the last few days we hear that the committee charged with the management have again addressed the governor to request that the Hospital be allowed to remain.

"The history of the rise and progress of tea drinking is truly curious. Tea was first imported from Holland by the Earls of Arlington and Ossory, in 1666; from their ladies the women of quality learned its use. Its price was then three pounds a pound, and continued the same to 1707. In 1715, we began to use green tea, and the practice of drinking it descended to the lower class of the people. In 1720, the French began to send it hither by a clandestine commerce. From 1717 to 1726, we imported annually seven hundred thousand pounds. From 1726 to 1742, a million and two hundred thousand pounds were every year brought to London; in some years afterwards three millions; and in 1755, near four millions of pounds, or two thousand tons, in which we are not to reckon that which is surreptitiously introduced, which perhaps is nearly as much. Such quantities are indeed sufficient to alarm us; it is at least worth inquiry to know what are the qualities of such a plant, and what the consequences of such a trade." Dr. Johnson in 1757. What would Dr. Johnson have said of the present consumption, which exceeds 40 millions of pounds. But now no silver is brought to China to buy tea with, there is on the whole chinese trade a balance of about 5 millions of dollars in favor of the imports, and this sum must annually be exported from China in precious metals.

SAILED OR DESPATCHED.—None.

The Arab for Manila and Inglehorough for London are under despatch for Monday next.

The Duke of Sussex was by stress of weather (it having blown a hurricane in Lat. 14—15 on the 16th Nov'br.) obliged to put into Manila to refit, whence she sailed again on the 2d November. The Ternate had also put into Manila, and left again for China on the 27th November. The Lady Hayes for China was also obliged to put into Manila, where she arrived on the 1st December. The Spanish Brig Rosario, from Manila bound for China was totally lost on the coast of Laconia. Notidings had been received of the Isabel II which sailed for China on the same day as the Rosario. The Trinidad and Puma bound for Singapore, and the Cometa for China had put back into port. The Scaleby Castle sailed for Singapore on the 27th November.

The Amer. Brig Theodore was seen by the Asia off the coast of Laconia, as well as another barque which has proved to be the Argyle. Nothing is yet known about the vessels yet missing from Singapore, the Ariel and Sir Charles Malcolm.

N B The cubit is 14⅛ inches: measurement is taken on each entry of the vessel with cargo (except Rice) and is from the Foremast to the Mizen mast, or tiller head in Brigs; and across at the main mast; these are multiplied together for the above products—The largest class pay from $ 4300 to $ 4800; 2d class from $ 3700 to $ 3780; 3rd class from $ 3700 and under. The Cumsha; or Present Fee is paid by all vessels 1600 Taels or $ 2225. Linguists fee $ 173¼ and Comprador's fees $ 50. Also Pilotage $ 60, inwards and outwards the same. On French and other Foreign vessels they are slightly varied. Riceladen ships are charged only about $ 1200 in lieu of measurement &c.,

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—No arrivals of LONGCLOTHS, during the week, and the market may therefore be considered firmer.

COTTON YARN.—is very depressed. and at this moment no sales could be effected, except at a serious sacrifice, even of the finer qualities.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, are without alteration in price or demand. LONGELLS, scarlet, have advanced within the last day or two, but assorted colors remain at about the same price, black having declined. CAMBLETS, as low as before.

METALS.—LEAD, has declined fully ¼ of a dollar. IRON, continues in good demand.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, declining in consequence of importations and unfavorable accounts of the northern markets. BETELNUT, is also in no demand from the late large arrivals

SANDALWOOD.—The markets in the interior being unfavorable, it has declined fully $ 2 per Picul.

RICE.—Quite stationary and the demand very languid for foreign rice, at even our low quotations.

COTTON.—A large sale of about 4000 bales Bombay Cotton of middling quality was effected a few days since at T. ×. and we understand cannot be resoled at the same price Bombay Cotton has consequently been very depressed during the past week. Bengals are inactive, but without much variation in price. Madras has not yet been offered, but our former quotation of 10.5 and 8.5 could not, we fear, be realised for the respective qualities.

OPIUM.—The outside deliveries do not appear so brisk as hitherto but at Whampoa the trade is conducting to an almost equal extent, we understand, as formerly, and although the risk is very serious to those concerned, as hitherto the seizures have been trifling they have been emboldened in their operations. We have had no arrivals during the week from Bombay or Bengal except the Lady Grant. The deliveries at Lintin to the 15th were, Patna 303; Benares, 31; Malwa, 247: Total 581 chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—No transactions yet in this article. We hear offers have been made for good Cargo Tsatlee of 380 $ per Picul, but $ 400 is demanded, and 430 @ 460 for the fine chops.

TEA.—The teamen will not submit to such reduction in the lower qualities of Congou as is required by the prices in the home-markets. A few chops of green tea have been sold at the quotations, chiefly we believe for America, and a chop of half chests of Twankay has been bought at 20 Taels, but the market for green tea cannot, by any means, be considered as settled at these prices.

EXCHANGE.—The H. C. Agents have reduced their rate for bills for advances to 4s. 6d.—There are no private bills offering on India, from the absence of any Company's or private bills, and the scarcity of Sycee, parties are reduced to make remittances in broken spanish dollars.

On French and other Foreign vessels they are slightly varied. Riceladen ships are charged only about $ 1200 in lieu of measurement &c.,

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—No arrivals of Longcloths, during the week, and the market may therefore be considered firmer.

COTTON YARN.—is very depressed, and at this moment no sales could be effected, except at a serious sacrifice, even of the finer qualities.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, are without alteration in price or demand. LONGELLS, scarlet, have advanced within the last day or two, but assorted colors remain at about the same price, [illegible] having declined. CAMBLETS, as low as before.

METALS.—LEAD, has declined fully ¼ of a dollar. IRON, continues in good demand.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, declining in consequence of importations and unfavorable accounts of the northern markets. [illegible], is also in no demand from the late large arrivals.

SANDALWOOD.—The markets in the interior being unfavourable, it has declined fully $ 2 per Picul.

RICE.—Quite stationary and the demand very languid for foreign rice, at even our low quotations.

COTTON.—A large sale of about 4000 bales Bombay Cotton of middling quality was effected a few days since at T. 8. and we understand cannot be resold at the same price. Bombay Cotton has consequently been very depressed during the past week. Bengals are inactive, but without much variation in price. Madras has not yet been offered, but our former quotation of 10.5 and 9.0 could not, we fear, be realised for the respective qualities.

OPIUM.—The outside deliveries do not appear so brisk as hitherto but at Whampoa the trade is conducting to an almost equal extent, we understand, as formerly, and although the risk is very serious to those concerned, as hitherto the seizures have been trifling, they have been emboldened in their operations. We have had no arrivals during the week from Bombay or Bengal except the Lady Grant. The deliveries at Lintin to the 15th were, Patna, 303; Benares, 31; Malwa, 267: Total 601 chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—No transactions yet in this article. We hear offers have been made for good Cargo Tastlee of 380 $ per Picul, but $ 400 is demanded, and 430 @ 450 for the fine chops.

TEA.—The teamen will not submit to such reduction in the lower qualities of Congou as is required by the prices in the [illegible]. A few chops of green tea have been sold at the quotations, chiefly we believe for America, and a chop of [illegible] has been bought at 30 Taels, but the market for green tea cannot, by any means, be considered as settled at these prices.

EXCHANGE.—The H. C. Agents have reduced their rate for bills for advances to 4s. 6d.—There are no private bills offering. To India, from the absence of any Company's or private bills, and the scarcity of Sycee, parties are reduced to make remittances in broken spanish dollars.

NOTICE.—Is hereby given that the Honorable Company's Agents are ready to receive bonafide Tenders for Advances on Bills of Exchange, secured by Consignments to England of Tea and Nanking Raw Silk, in the manner prescribed in a paper entitled, "Terms and Conditions for making Advances in China," at the rate of Four Shillings and Six pence (4s. 6d.) per Spanish Dollar.

The Arab for Manila and Ingleborough for London are under despatch for Monday next.

The Duke of Sussex was by stress of weather (it having blown a hurricane in Lat. 14—15 on the 16th Novbr.) obliged to put into Manila to refit, whence she sailed again on the 2d November. The Ternate had also put into Manila, and left again for China on the 27th November. The Lady Hayes for China was also obliged to put into Manila, where she arrived on the 1st December. The Spanish Brig Rosario, from Manila bound for China was totally lost on the coast of Luconia. Notidings had been received of the Isabel II which sailed for China on the same day as the Rosario. The Trinidad and Fama bound for Singapore, and the Cometa for China had put back into port. The Sealeby Castle sailed for Singapore on the 27th November.

The Amer Brig Theodore was seen by the Asia off the coast of Luconia, as well as another barque which has proved to be the Argyle. Nothing is yet known about the vessels yet missing from Singapore, the Ariel and Sir Charles Malcolm.

VOL. 3d. No. 17. CANTON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER, 30TH, 1837. No. 121

FROM THE MORNING HERALD 24TH JULY.

Our letters from Madrid date respectively the 11th and 15th; they have both been delayed by the insecure state of the roads; the latter indeed reached us by an extraordinary courier, who managed to escape the Carlists. Our readers will be prepared for the news that the Calatrava ministry has at length induced the QUEEN REGENT to dismiss her minister of the interior, Senor PITA PIZARRO, who was greatly in her confidence, and who is amongst the most moderate of the deputies to the cortes. His successor is Senor ACUNA, a man no way celebrated, but who will act in complete subserviency to his nominators. The intrigues which led to this act on the part of the QUEEN REGENT were marked by some bloodshed and many outrages; but, speaking in a popular sense, the capital was not in a state of tumult or disorder, although the people were assembled from day to day in various parts, and some military precautions were observed. Respecting the proceedings of Senor CALATRAVA and his worthy colleagues, MENDIZABAL and LLANDERO, there can be but one opinion. The editor of the Porvenir was tried on the 10th before a jury at Madrid, for the offence of endeavouring to excite the people against the government, and he was unanimously acquitted.

The accounts which reached Madrid from the provinces were of the most melancholy description; in Aragon it was asserted that even the church plate had been seized and sold to defray the expences of feeding the troops.

A council of war was established at the capital to sit permanently during the present state of affairs. The duties of this council were not, as many of our readers might suppose, merely directed towards consulting on the steps necessary to be taken to hold the Carlists in check, but it was to act as a standing military tribunal, probably, hereafter, to be converted into a political court.

The cortes, during the past week, had been occupied in the discussion on the new electoral law. The summonses for the new cortes were expected shortly to be issued.

With respect to Don CARLOS, the following telegraphic express conveys the most authentic and most recent report:—

"BORDEAUX, JULY 19. Seven p. m.—The pretender appears to be directing his steps towards the kingdom of Murcia. He left Torreson on the 11th, taking the road to Lerida, leaving Valencia on his left. Orres was on the same day at Serica; Buerens had arrived at Teruel, and immediately marched on to join Orres at Moya. Espartero writes on the 12th, that he was marching from the side of Dera and Cetina to join Buerens. The bands of Llangostera and other leaders, who were in the environs of Saragossa, have retired towards Belchite. The road is free, and the mails from Madrid which were due have arrived. The accounts from this capital come up to the 15th, in the evening, all was quiet. The minister of the interior has been replaced by M. Acuna, member of the cortes."

Reports in Paris, on Saturday last, very confidently stated him to have been brought to action, on the 13th, by ORRES; but we have no reason beyond that afforded by very common rumour to believe this account.

From the frontiers we have received a despatch of the 8th from Solsona, the locale of the Carlist junta of Catalonia. We since know by telegraph that the blockade of Berga, mentioned therein, had been followed by the capitulation.

From St. Sebastian our correspondent writes, on the 16th, that the new constitution was proclaimed there on that day, with great, though burlesque ceremony; such, at least, must naturally be the effect of a proclamation for the seventh or eighth time of a permanent state of things which does not last beyond its period of gestation.

The remains of the disbanded legion, together with about 30 officers, were to sail on Monday, the 17th, for England, in the Pamela transport. Gen. O'GORMAN had resumed and retained the command of the new brigade of 1,200 men, formed from the debris of their former comrades. The Carlists had made their appearance in the neighbourhood of Hernani and St. Sebastian.

We find the following in a Paris paper of Saturday, but it is totally contrary to our advices on the subject; and we, therefore, do not give it entire credit:—

"By a letter, written in Madrid on the evening of the 15th, we learn that it is M. Armendarits who is appointed minister of the interior, and not M. Acuna, as stated in the telegraphic despatch. M. Acuna is nominated for the department of the marine or of justice, but which was not positively known."

Other accounts from Madrid which have been laid before us state that on the 14th the QUEEN REGENT signed the bills for the withdrawal of the sequestration on the property of the Spanish refugees, and also for confirming the decree of amnesty. In the sitting of the cortes of the 15th, article 10 of the Tithe Abolition Bill was agreed to, whereby all sales of ecclesiastical property was put an entire stop to up to the year 1940. On the 17th a proposition of Senor NUNEZ, respecting the responsibility incurred by M. MENDIZABAL in withholding the amount of the dividend on Active Bonds from the holders, was to be discussed, and a very stormy debate was expected.

The province of La Mancha was in a state of perfect desolation in consequence of the inroads of the so-disant Carlist bands. These marauders seize all the travellers they can lay hands on, and compel them to pay ransom money; amongst recent sufferers in this way were two sons of M. BERTRAND DE LYS, of Cordova, and the brother of Senor ZARCO VALLE, who was minister of war for some time.

We translate from the Madrid Gazette some of the most recent despatches from the QUEEN's generals. The Barcelona journal, El Vapor, gives the following intelligence:—"The captain-general of the army of Catalonia has received from the military government of Crovera a confidential letter, dated the 13th, which says. "I have this instant received news of an important affair at Valencia by General ORERA, the brigadiers IRIARTE and NOGUERAS. The pretender and CABRERA have lost many men. I hasten to give you this news.

THE AMERICAN HOUSES.—From the time that the drain for gold began to set against the Bank in April, 1836, it must have become evident to all persons in the least acquainted with the principle, that there would be in the end a considerable scarcity of money, a difficulty of getting paper negotiated, and a fall of prices. But no anticipations of this sort, nor even the letter of the American President, and the discredit thrown on American paper, appear to have had any considerable influence in repressing the engagements of most of the American houses. Their agents in America drew upon them more heavily than ever; and they seem to have gone on, throughout 1836, entering into fresh engagements, as if the trade had been on the firmest footing. We subjoin a statement, which we believe to be accurate, of the amount of the outstanding acceptances of the three great houses which have stopped payment, on the 1st of January of the following year:—

	Messrs. A.	Messrs. B.	Messrs. C.	Total.
	£	£	£	£
Jan. 1, 1834	861,000	680,00	813,000	2,354,000
1835	753,000	560,000	731,000	2,044,000
1836	1,070,000	1,147,000	1,504,000	3,721,000
1837	1,539,000	1,922,000	2,112,000	5,573,000

This extraordinary increase is the more unaccountable, as there had been a heavy fall in the prices of most articles in the autumn of 1836, both in America and here. And as there can be no doubt that the parties were most anxious to narrow their engagements, this shows better than anything else the vicious nature of the system on which they had been proceeding, and its tendency to plunge them still deeper into difficulties. Notwithstanding the damage done to their credit, the houses continued to go on for some time longer; till at length, in the latter end of February or the beginning of March last, the firms, whose engagements are particularized above, found it impossible, without extraordinary aid, to continue their payments. The amount of their engagements, when they found themselves in this position, did not differ materially from what it had been in January; and we believe we may estimate the engagements of the other houses at about as much, making in all a sum of eleven or twelve millions sterling. And had these three houses been allowed suddenly to go down, one at least, if not more, of the other houses must have followed, and a most violent and indeed unparalleled shock have been given to the manufactures and commerce of the country. Under these circumstances the Bank of England did come forward; and though the precedent be in some respects objectionable, still, as we endeavoured to show in our last Number, the case was so peculiar, and the consequences of the stoppage of the houses at the period in question would have been so ruinous, that the Bank is entitled to the public thanks for having stepped forwards, and held them up till they got their engagements very greatly reduced.—Edinburgh Review.

ATHENS, June 8.—On the 22nd of May, at half-past two, p. m., all Athens was thrown into consternation by a dreadful explosion. The police had, by way of precaution ordered 14 sacks of gunpowder to be removed from the house of a merchant. A police officer was ordered to take it to a place of security out of the city. From negligence, or with a view to peculation, he took the sacks to his own house. On the way, a hole was made in one of the sacks, and so a train was formed in the court-yard to the place where the powder was deposited. A boy, 12 years old, discovered this, and could not resist the temptation of amusing himself by setting fire to the train. At the moment that he brought a live coal in order to apply it to the train, a woman who was busy washing remarked it, and exclaimed—"Panajia! what are you about?" But her voice was lost in the dreadful explosion of the house, which was blown up, casting a shower of stones over Athens, and breaking a great number of windows in the neighbourhood. The remain of an adjoining half-destroyed buildings were immediately in flames, and it was only the extraordinary exertions of the Albanian soldiers that succeeded in subduing the fire in a very narrow street in the middle of the city. The unfortunate woman was got out from under the ruins in a few hours, and still alive, but fate seemed to have preserved her only to relate the cause of the unhappy event, for on the following morning her remains and those of the boy were committed to the earth.—German Paper.—Morning Herald, July 6.

A meeting of the excluded East India maritime officers was held yesterday at the Jerusalem Coffee-house, Captain Barber in the chair. The object of the meeting was briefly stated to be the dissolution of the committee, in consequence of a communication having been made from the Right Hon. the President of the Board of Controul, that although their claims as a body could not be recognised, yet every case submitted should meet with fair and impartial consideration from him, Sir J. Hobhouse, and the directors. After the finance report had been read and adopted, the committee was declared dissolved, and thanks were voted to its members and their chairman. It was also resolved unanimously that a portion of the funds remaining over should be employed in the purchase of a gold box, to be presented to G. R. Robinson, Esq., M. P. for Worcester, in testimony of their gratitude for his eloquent advocacy of their claims in the House of Commons.—Globe July 7.

JUAN FERNANDEZ.—This lovely island, on which Alexander Selkirk was cast away, and thus gave rise to the novel of Robinson Crusoe, was swallowed up by the recent earthquake, which destroyed a great portion of Chili, in South America.—West Indian, May 11.—Very doubtful.

Ship DUKE OF SUSSEX. December 24th 1837.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Sir,—In your paper of the 2nd of December I find a letter copied from the Singapore Free Press giving a statement of an accident by which the ships Duke of Sussex and Julia were sufferers, and sufferers exactly in the degree which every one would suppose probable when two ships so disproportionate in size came in contact. The letter I allude to must have been published in the Singapore Free Press after my departure, and it was not until I saw Capt. Richards letter, nor indeed am I now aware of being guilty of aught save that of commanding the large ship, but as Capt. Richards, not satisfied with the twofold object of protecting his nautical reputation and relieving from anxiety those "many friends" scattered over the surface of the globe and basking in the sunshine of his affection, will read with breathless "interest" of the daring assault upon the person of his Julia which he expressly states were his objects in writing, and with which objects I certainly should never have interfered, has thought proper to go so far astray as to insinuate that there was a want of humanity in my conduct after the accident, I feel called upon to notice his letter, and I trust you will have no objection to give me this opportunity of refuting a groundless charge, and of pointing out the worthlessness of a production so replete with contradictions and insincerity as Capt. Richards' letter.

This commander of the Julia begins his letter by informing the Editor of the Singapore Free Press, and, through his means the public generally, that he rejoices in "many friends both in England and India" and this man of "many friends" goes on to say that he does not write with the "intention of implying blame," his "object" being to "obviate the very unfavourable impression" made against him by an article in the Singapore Free Press (which article be it remembered, imparts no blame to Capt. Richards) and to relieve from "painful interest" the before mentioned and much distributed "many friends" among whom I presume the owners and insurers are included. Now Mr. Editor, I hope you will bear with me while I point out how widely this nautical favourite has wandered from his text—how little reason he had to be dissatisfied with the article complained of, and how regardless he has shown himself to veracity in his anxiety to protect his interest. The first and, I believe, the only notice taken of the accident in the Singapore Free Press, previous to Capt. Richards letter was the following—"We regret to state that the Duke of Sussex from Penang, and the Julia "from Bombay, which arrived here on Tuesday last, "came in collision with each other during a heavy "squall, about one o'clock in the morning of the 17th "inst., off the Carimons. The Duke of Sussex, being "much the larger vessel, only carried away her Jib-"boom and spirit-sail-yard, but the Julia, we are sorry "to learn, had her bowsprit and fore-mast carried away "and sunk in deep water. We are not aware how "blame attaches any where—as far as we can learn the "collision was purely accidental." There is surely nothing in the above article which could keep this man's "many friends" in "painful anxiety" and even his "nautical friends" of whom he also tells the Editor he has "many" might eat their dinner and possibly digest it, after reading that their friend Julia had come in collision with a large ship during a thick squall where there was no possibility of seeing very far. But Sir, Capt. Richards, to disprove this article, delivers himself of a letter, in one sentence of which he expressly states he has "no intention of implying blame," while almost in the next sentence he insinuates the gravest charge, a charge of inhumanity against me, and in the same letter inserts an extract from his log book which he has the wit to acknowledge was manufactured for a notary public, and the stupidity to make the same letter disagree with the extract from his log. The following extracts in juxtaposition are from Capt. Richards letter.

"The accident was not "occasioned by a heavy "squall."	"At 3 a. m. hazy over "the land, in top gallt: "sails and jib, furled "main sail and hauled the "fore-sail up soup. At 3.30 "squally from the south-"ward with rain, bore "the ship up with her head "to the S. E., wind about "S. by W.
"The Julia was inside "the Carimons lying to "under her top-sails "when the Duke of Sus-"sex under full sail run-"ning on to her lee or "larboard bow."	"During the squall lo-"wered the top-sails on "the cap and kept the head "going. Saw a ship under "sail about two points on "the lee bow, immediate-"ly showed our light, "strange ship drawing near "and steering wild, hailed "her constantly with the "speaking trumpet, she "stood into us still carry-"ing sail with a strong "breeze and about 4 a. m. "she run stem on to us."

The above are acknowledgements of the squall taken from the ships log, and inserted in Capt. Richards letter tho' denied in the first paragraph of the same letter. There Capt. Richards says, the Julia was "lying to under her top sails;" a little further on the log proves that the Julia was not "lying to under her top sails" for the log says, "during the squall lowered the top sails on the cap," so that the Julia was not "lying to" but was drifting, and in such a condition she was utterly unmanageable, which I believe every sailor taking time and place into consideration will allow was lubberly and unseaman like. The log continues, "strange ship drawing near and steering wild;" here is a man talking of another ship "steering wild" when he had lost the management of his own; again "strange ship passed close of us without hailing our ship," at this time the Sussex was going ten knots and passed the Julia like lightning, I had run forward the moment she was in sight and was on the fore-castle when the accident happened, the blow gave us no perceptible check, and, before I could get aft to the poop, the Julia was out of sight, and I never regained a sight of her until she shewed her lights, soon after which I stood towards her under very much encumbered by my own wreck beating under the bows, and pray Sir, for what cause was Capt. Richards firing his "minute guns" and disturbing the whole neighbourhood? I presume his crew roused in chorus; his ship was not materially injured, and, certainly, was in no danger; such conduct reminds one of the bowling of a hound, and it appears by his own letter that his crew were entirely abroad that nothing but the accident of his anchor falling of itself saved the Julia from going on shore, for, he says, "while the stranger was fout of us our best bower anchor ran down, and afterwards brought us up in 17 fathoms water." But the bad faith of Capt. Richards in the latter part of his letter is, if possible, more discreditable than his contradictions in the first, he says, "after daylight saw a large ship coming up from the westward," now, Sir, I was on board the Julia with my 2nd officer and surgeon by the first break of day, I was unwilling and rudely received, and so ignorant was Capt. Richards of the relative position of the two ships, that he insisted the Sussex was on the starboard and not on the larboard tack when the collision took place, and he said, "why did you not put your helm a port? Now it so happened that the moment the Julia was seen, I ordered the helm to be put hard a port, which is the rule with ships on the larboard tack; the Sussex answered her helm immediately, and, had the Julia been under command with head way, as it was natural to suppose she was the case, instead of being unmanageable and drifting as reported with the tide setting her to the southward, the Sussex would undoubtedly have cleared her. Capt. Richards proceeds, "the Capt., chief officer, and surgeon of the Sussex came on board, and left us while we were clearing away the wreck," but does not say why we left him, but continues "the Bark Ariel, Capt. Warden, bore down to us and sent an officer on board to offer assistance which was the Duke of Sussex boat," and pray, why should my boat and my officer return to the Julia with the officer of the Ariel, except from my having learned the Ariel and expressed my anxiety to assist a ship I had accidentally injured, but whose commander had treated me with such incivility upon my going in person to offer assistance, that I was compelled to leave his ship, and this treatment proceeded from a man who owed to him in law and give him "full use of my men," what in truth, I would not have spared even your seamen and thirteen also, one boat carrying the master to tow the Julia, with a crew and some other men to the other to assist them, and these men remained on board until the labour was lost, the office stopped, and no further use for them.

But the last sentence of the concluding paragraph are what I principally complain of; in the one he says "the wind falling light," "that the starboard of the Ship now the Sussex got the view away, leaving us to do the best we could." The unfeasibility [illegible] of the above is beyond belief. I towed the Julia to St. Johns, where, the wind failing us, the two ships fell on board of each other, the Julia coming stern on to the Sussex in midships; the loss of her bowsprit saved us from injury, but the necessity of separating was evident; for this purpose I hailed Capt. Richards to cast off and the next moment appeared before the cabin, and desired him would let go the hawser adding that I would again take him in tow when a breeze sprung up. But, Sir, he refused to let go the tow rope, and I was obliged to send a boat to let go my own hawser when I forcibly did leave Capt. Richards and his Julia to "do the best they could" bitterly regretting that I had ever rendered them assistance.

Capt. Richards concludes his letter by saying, "These "accidents happen to the best and most skilful seamen, "but not as a necessity; I only expected to ship that crowds "as much, when clear of us, have been to, scattered "or lowered boats to enquire into the fate of those that "ran on board of instead of running out of sight till "daylight." And this Mr. Editor winds up a letter which Capt. Richards states he has not written with the "intention of implying blame," and, be it remembered, this letter was published after I left Singapore, and after a number of the Singapore Free Press had circulated on every part of the globe, and but for the accident of your having copied it into the Canton Press, I might never have seen it, or, at all events, so late that nothing it would have been useless.

But, Sir, to conclude this, I fear, too long letter, the facts of the case are these. I got within the Carimons on my way to Singapore, a little before midnight on the 16th October, but, being disinclined to anchor, I stood for St. Johns under very little sail, the navigation I found and was, entering up considerably out of my course, myself on the look out, when I found I had been set by a strong southerly current; I put the ship about, and while standing from a dangerous position to regain the fair way, I came in collision with the Julia standing apparently on the starboard tack, but in reality with her topsails on the cap and sheets, and the ship drifting with stern-way. As soon as we had cleared each other I put the ship about and stood towards the Julia and as close to her as safety would allow, I hailed her, as I said, wastefully and rudely enough, and Capt. Richards conduct throughout the day was quite in character with his conduct in publishing the letter I have commented on.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
H. HORSMAN.

THE ANNA-ROBERTSON'S PACKET.

Mr. Editor,—Spite of all that Capt. Elliot and the "Chamber of Commerce" combined have been able to effect towards placing the "Canton Post Office," on a more respectable footing, and thereby of ensuring a more speedy regular delivery of Letters, the object so anxiously desired by all, seems as far off as ever.

Really, Sir, it's a standing disgrace to this purely mercantile community, that shippers are allowed, forsooth to exercise their discretion, as to when, and in what manner, the mails brought by them are to be permitted to be forwarded to Canton!

Complaints on this subject are so numerous and so perpetually recurring as hardly to require that any one in particular should be referred to. I cannot however avoid calling attention to the detention of Letters by the Capt. of the "Anna Robertson" —who landed in town on Wednesday, along with four other passengers, from a fast boat, but brought no letters, (although he could find room for various boxes of musters) alleging, it is said, his fears lest they should be taken from him by the Chinese. Taken from him and four other Foreigners! Is it all sheer humbug!—and he knows it!—But the worst feature of the case is, that Capt. Parry handsomely offered on the part of Messrs. Jardine & Co. the use of their Schooner for that purpose to the officer in command of the "Anna Robertson," who replied that the Capt. had taken up the mails to Canton in "his fast boat" or words to that effect. The officer had those instructions given to him, and of course no blame attaches to such conduct beyond his knowing that the answer was a false one.

The "Anna Robertson" will be laid on the berth by and bye when we shall see what support she receives for subjecting the merchants of Canton to such gratuitous inconveniences by thus wantonly detaining their letters. N. N.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY THE GENERAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF CANTON REGARDING THE EXECUTION OF ORDERS FOR TEA AND RAW-SILK WITH A PREAMBLE SETTING FORTH THE GROUNDS THEREOF

As the Foreign Trade of China is by Chinese law wholly carried on through a body of Chinese Hong-merchants in number not exceeding Thirteen, who alone are permitted to own boats for the transportation of Merchandise to or from the foreign shipping, or warehouses for the safekeeping of the same prior to sale or subsequent to purchase, and in whose service and under whose absolute control, are all the coolies or labourers and boatmen employed in the foreign trade, and into whose possession therefore all Merchandise introduced into Canton or exported therefrom by Foreigners, is necessarily intrusted, from the time of it's leaving the Ship's deck, or to that of being laden thereon, without the possibility of supervision by the foreigners interested therein as Agents or otherwise, and from the regulations of the Hoppos office or Customs and the distance of the foreign shipping from Canton when at the appointed anchorage for receiving or discharging Cargo, the Merchandise imported, must unavoidably remain one night in boats in charge of servants or boatmen, and that exported, one night in the warehouse of the Hong-merchants after having been put in a complete state for Shipment, and another night in boats, which affords facilities for fraudulent practices which have been often availed of by the Chinese; and the regulations above enumerated having become fixed by the long practice of the British East India Company to the late trade with China and by the acquiescence of all other foreigners, and absolutely unalterable by any influence within the exercise of the foreign houses of Agency of Canton:

And as Tea is a production which enters largely into the export trade of China, and is a commodity the value of which depends (besides seasons, the state of foreign markets, and other circumstances) on the fluctuating taste of foreign consumers, which is so capricious, that the most skilful judges, both native and foreign in China, declare the most discordant opinions as to the character and value of Tea designed for it's supply, and the professional Inspectors or brokers in Great Britain, or elsewhere, judgments thereon equally conflicting and various: and as Raw Silk, an article of export next in importance to Tea, from the mode of packing at the places of production, in which condition it is necessarily shipped, and from the system of Sale, can never be procured of a quality absolutely uniform throughout, but is always more or less mixed:

And as, notwithstanding the circumstances above enumerated, certain importers of Tea and Raw Silk into Great Britain, have refused to receive for themselves investments made by their orders, and for their account, and declared that they consider the same at the risk of their Agents in Canton, on whom they would attempt to throw the loss of their speculations, on the alledged ground of a want of correspondence between the quality of the goods ordered, and those which were shipped, although the orders were executed with due diligence and attention, and with the closest practicable adherence to their prescribed condition:

Therefore, moved by the foregoing considerations, Resolved by the General Chamber of Commerce of Canton, that the conduct of the aforesaid importers of Tea and Raw Silk into Great Britain is, in the opinion of the Chamber, not only contrary to commercial usage, but with respect to the mode in which trade is necessarily conducted at the port of Canton, especially unreasonable and unjust, and must be firmly resisted; and that in the execution of any order for Tea or Raw Silk hereafter intrusted to us, (the members of the Chamber and others who declare their assent to this resolution) we will not on any plea be held answerable for any discrepancies of quality which may be alledged to exist in England or elsewhere, unless it shall be shown that due care and skill have not been observed in the selection and purchase of the goods, and in shipping them off.—

Canton, 23d December, 1837.

CANTON PRESS,

30th December, 1837.

This being the last time on which we shall appear before our readers in this year, let us, before putting it on the shelf with its five thousand five hundred and ninety six predecessors, take a short review of it's incidents as far as regards the small portion of the terrestrial inhabitants come to China in search of a fortune, this being the business of all foreigners in Canton, with very few exceptions, and in which we heartily wish them every success. Several have however been the causes during the year now about to end, to retard that success, and the principal of these have been the great distress which has prevailed in all commercial communications all over the world, of which the reaction has been felt here also; the very high duties on tea in England; the operations of the E. I. Company's Finance committee here; and last though not least, the attempts of the chinese government to prevent the Opium trade, whilst the production of the drug has increased in India in an unprecedented degree.

The general commercial distress seems to have been brought on by overtrading, facilitated by an immensely increased paper circulation, as an instance of which we may mention the increased liabilities of the three great London American houses who have stopped payment, a statement of whose affairs will be found in another column, and it seems probable that other commercial establishments have acted in a similar manner. To them must be added the encreased circulation of the bank of England and country banks there, and the enormous amount of paper brought into circulation by the numerous banks of North America. Money became so plentiful, that to employ it speculations, the event of which was any thing but safe, were entered on, produce was raised far beyond the consumption, and it was too soon found that too great facility of means for speculation are by no means likely to produce a state of lasting prosperity. We can liken this artificial way of forcing trade to nothing better than the putting manure to an already rich soil; the plant will shoot up more vigorously for a time, but instead of producing flower or fruit, its powers have been expended on the stem and leaves, which soon wither to no advantage. Such has been the case with most speculations entered on with the money raised by paper circulation, witness the land speculations in America, the depreciation of all produce, and the numerous railway schemes in England. A reaction must follow a state of such general excitement, and it came, and has been more fatal in it's consequences than any similar catastrophe heretofore.

The China trade would probably have escaped many of these fatal consequences to a greater degree than it now has done, had not the E. I. Company by establishing a kind of pawnbroker's office here, for the sake of making profitable remittances to England, used their credit to foment speculation, by which prices of Chinese produce here were driven up considerably, markets at home glutted, and the unfortunate speculators exposed to severe loss. The Company's finance committee still exists, & the dollars they have again this year accumulated, and of the existence of which the Chinese are well aware, keep alive their hope of obtaining better prices than home markets will warrant, and may be considered the chief cause of prices not being lower than they are. We hope however that our neighbours will not, for the sake of speculation, have recourse to the Company's treasury during this season, and glad should we be to see the Co's Agents obliged, in order to get rid of the money, to lower their exchange by several pence yet, that the Company may at least also suffer in pocket as a retaliation of the loss caused to so many. Ere the end of the season we hope to see this.

We now arrive at the third of the grievances we have to complain of, as injurious to our interests, and quite contrary to the promises held out to the Free-traders by the British Government, we mean the injudiciously high duties levied on teas in England, nominally as much per lb as was paid during the Company's monopoly, but in fact twice as much, and, in many instances, more than three times as much, comparing the present sale prices to the Company's. We hope the interest of the China traders will be protected in the new parliament, and that the Government will be made to perform it's former promise, that the duty to be levied on tea under the free trade should not exceed that of 96 per cent. paid under the monopoly. To this high duty alone is it owing that he consumption of tea has increased so little.

But of all the grievances of the expiring year, that which has been felt most on the spot, have been the attempts of the Chinese Government to stop the Opium trade, and the consequent uncertainty respecting it. The attempts of the government have been in so far successful that they have at times greatly embarrassed the trade, and that the deliveries have been partially interrupted, leaving a much larger stock on hand than would have been otherwise the case and causing the prices to go very low. From prudential motives, it is true, the India Government has done something towards the relief of the Opium traders, by allowing them a bonus on the high prices paid, but the production of the drug, both by the Government, and of Malwa, has encreased to such an extent, that it treatens far to outgrow the consumption.

Another grievance not before enumerated is the existence or non existence, (we do not know which) of Her Majesty's Commission in Canton. The Chief Superintendent has declined all communication with the local authorities, has taken down the British flag, and retired to Macao, but his Deputy Superintendent and other individuals of the Commission still remain here, giving thereby an appearance of indecision to the step taken by the Superintendent, which by the Chinese, is likely to be considered as repentance.

In closing our remarks on this year, let us hope that at the end of the next we may not have to recount so long a chapter of grievances, but that every thing will be good fortune and prosperity.

A few words of ourselves. During our yet short career we have met with considerable support from the public, for which we give our heartfelt thanks. We have had to combat with many difficulties, but the encreasing list of our subscribers gives us the gratifying proof that our labor has been approved of. We shall continue, as we have hitherto done, to advocate the interest of this community to the best of our ability.

We have had, during the week, two arrivals from England, the Copland from Liverpool, 1st August, and the Anna Robertson from London 5th August. The papers receive l by these vessels do not contain much news of interest, being chiefly filled with accounts of the general elections, which had been brought to a close in most of the boroughs, and we find in an enumeration in a London paper of 28th July that till then the elections had fallen on 101 Tories and 150 reformers, giving a majority of 49 in favor of the latter. The County elections are however said to have come off less favorably for the reformers, and among others, Mr. Jos. Hume is stated to have lost his election for Middlesex.

His late Majesty, after lying in state at Windsor on the 7th July, his remains were deposited on the following day.

Ernest, King of Hanover, (late Duke of Cumberland) on taking possession of his inheritance, the Kingdom of Hanover, issued a patent in which he deprives the country of it's constitution, stating his intention of considering what form of government shall appear to him as most likely to give comfort to his subjects speaking at same time of the happiness they enjoyed when no constitution stood between them and the royal power. It is to be hoped that the other northern powers will not countenance this crassumption of absolute power, and that the Hanoverians will not quietly submit to absolutism.

Mr. Cocking, who had invented, as he thought, a parachute on a perfectly safe construction, ascended in it, attached to Mr. Green's Nassau balloon, but the parachute on being severed from the balloon, did not properly open, and the unfortunate aeronaut was precipitated from a great hight, and dashed to pieces. His lifeless remains were found in a field.

The Cholera was still raging in Italy, and the plague in Constantinople.

Money was very abundant in England, and good bills might be discounted at 3 per cent. Consols at 91¼ @ 91⅜. The markets for produce had however not improved, and prices for Tea and Silk continued as low as ever with the exception perhaps of the best quality of Twankay for which 16s. is quoted.

The accounts of the Spanish affairs continued as contradictory as ever, each party representing the successes of their friends more according to what they wish them to be, than what they really are. We give a column of extracts of Spanish affairs.

A legitimate plot has been discovered in France, and General Donnedieu had been tried and sentenced to a fine of 500 francs and two years imprisonment.

Young Napoleon Louis Bonaparte, of Strasbourg celebrity, had returned to England from the United States. Sir Robert Peel is in some of the papers represented to be in very bad health. The King of Sweden also was dangerously ill.

The Queen in person, prorogued parliament on the 18th July.

The new general junction railroad between Liverpool, Manchester and Birmingham had been opened. The time occupied in the journey from Manchester to Birmingham was about 3 hours and a half, and, after the whole shall be thrown open, the travelling from London to Liverpool may be accomplished in less than 10 hours.

BRIG THEODORE.

The Amer Brig Theodore Capt. Farrington, with a cargo of Betelnut, left Singapore we believe about the middle of October, and we are sorry now to have to report her loss on the coast of Luconia where she was wrecked on the 25th of last month, under the following circumstances. The vessel on the morning of the 24th put into the port of Santa Maria 17.19 North Long. on the western coast of Luconia, for provisions, when, a gale coming on, and the anchorage unsafe, she was to prevent being drifted on shore, obliged to slip her anchor and to put to sea at 5 p. m. At 9 p. m., the wind veered to N. N. E., and the brig appeared to be making a west course of 3 miles per hour. At eleven a heavy gale came on, and a high sea breaking over the brig which began to labour much, and a new stay sail was blown out of the rope. At 1 a. m. she struck on a coral reef and was laid on her beamends, a heavy sea breaking over her. The mainmast was cut away, when the vessel righted, and was driven over the reef with many heavy lurches. At 1.30 a. m., she struck on another reef, and remained on it one hour, straining very much. At 3 the rudder went, taking with it the whole stern frame above the deck. At this time it was expected that the vessel would go to pieces every moment as she strained heavily amidships. At daybreak the vessel was found to be entirely surrounded by reefs, extending from south to southwest, distant about three miles from the shore. The ship's company, to preserve their lives, then got out the boats and embarked at 7 a. m., when they found to have struck on the Bolinao reef which bears S. W., by S. 56 miles from Santa Maria, and they must therefore have experienced a current setting them to the south at the rate of about 5 miles an hour!

The Captain and passenger embarked for Manila in a pontin, (small coasters used on the coasts of Luconia) where they arrived in safety, whilst the crew remained near where they landed. It is hoped that part of the cargo will be saved.

CHILE AND PERU.

A friend has favored us with the following extract of a letter from Lima received per the Argyle and dated the 18th October.

"The long intended expedition from Chile has at last set sail from Valparaiso on the 12th September, after an embargo of 38 days on all the shipping in the port. It consists of 7 men of war and 15 transports, carrying it is said 2600 infantry and 300 cavalry, with 700 horses, though it is thought by some that this force is somewhat over rated. On the 24th September they arrived off Arica, when a few troops were landed, and on the 4th October they arrived at Quilca, when the troops were all landed by the 10th having suffered the loss of one transport with horses, and of another, which, it is said, has made off. The expedition is now supposed to be on its march towards Arequipa, and this is very probable. 600 men are reported to have got the small pox, which together with the fever and ague so very prevalent in the valley of San Victor, 8 leagues in length, threatens them with severe loss. We expect fresh news every moment; the country is perfectly quiet, and not even disturbed by rumours, which, under circumstances like the present, are generally so rife. The war between Bolivia and the Argentines is almost at an end, the frontier provinces having all declared in favor of Bolivia and General Brown had already sent back to Bolivia part of this troops. General Santa Cruz is in Bolivia, but is soon expected back here. Every thing was quiet in Chile by the last accounts.

Our correspondent N. N. will find his letter in another column. We thank him for having brought the subject of the irregular delivery of letters before us, and in the instance of Capt. Hamilton of the Anna Robertson, we have from many parties heard the same complaints, as likewise of the offer of the Maria to the mate of the vessel by Capt. Parry, to forward the letters by, which was refused on the plea that Capt. Hamilton himself had taken them with him to Canton. The Anna Robertson has on board a general cargo, and we cannot understand what possible right her Captain can have to retain the letters. The season we have heard of, viz, the boat in which he came up being too small and unsafe, cannot hold good, seeing that a number of muster parcels and newspapers were brought up in her, besides other passengers and luggage, and where these found room, the letters surely might have also been placed. Our shipping neighbours have the means in their hands to punish such disregard of their interest and convenience.

The amusing rhyming colloquy for which we thank him who sent it, can for want of room appear in our next only.

Hing tae's creditors are, we understand, about to send a petition to the British Government, to assist them in obtaining payment.

From the governor's edict, of which a translation follows, it will be seen that, on account of the Opium trade we are again threatened with a partial stoppage of all trade.

Tsung President of the Board of War and Governor of the two Kwang provinces, and Ke, secondary Guardian of the Crown Prince, Vice President of the Board of War and Lieutenant Governor of Canton proclaim to the Hong-merchants for their full information.

On the 21st December the Hong merchants reported to us that they had received orders to deliver and explain to the Superintendent Elliot an edict issued by us, granting a limit of one month in which all the receiving vessels anchored in the waters might be driven away to their respective countries, and commanding them, the Hong-merchants, to prepare a statement of the facts for our guidance in the management of the business.

"In obedience to Your Excellency's commands" say the Hong-merchants, "we furnished copies of the Edict both to the Superintendent Elliot and to the several foreign merchants requesting their obedience to the same. We explained to them the absolute necessity for all the receiving ships being driven away within a month and requested them to inform us of the day of their departure to enable us to report the same to Y. E. We have explained to them over and over again, that by repeated Imperial Edicts, the business must be managed with the utmost rigor.

"Now the limited period having elapsed and we having received no notice of the ships having departed, either from the Superintendent Elliot or from the merchants, we felt it incumbent on us again to question them on the subject. The merchants with one voice replied "we are not the owners of the Opium vessels, neither can we controul their actions. On receipt of H. E.'s former commands we forwarded them to the vessels anchored at Cap-sing-moon, Cum-sing-moon, and Lintin, commanding their departure, and they then left. Again having received an edict ordering their departure within a limited period and forbidding them to loiter about and delay any longer, we also forwarded it, but whether they will obey the said orders, we, the foreign merchants, are unable to say, not being owners of them and having no power to controul their actions."

"It appears but just to us, the Hong-merchants, that foreigners trading at Canton should obey your Excellency's commands and observe with trembling awe the established laws of of the Heavenly kingdom.

"Your Excellency's favor has been repeatedly experienced by them, and they have had the most lucid orders issued for their guidance; again and a third time have they been warned. Instead of hastening the opium vessels away, within the period your Excellency so indulgently allowed them, they have daringly presumed to loiter about and delay, madly hoping that such conduct will be overlooked. The merchants have also denied the ownership of those vessels and were perversely bent on concealing the real state of things. It is our humble opinion that your Excellency's threat of stopping the trade should be put in force which would effectually warn and awe them into obedience. Whether these opinions are correct or not, it is our duty to lay them before Y. E., that you may investigate the facts and act as seems fet."

Now it appears by the above statement of the Hong-merchants, that the Superintendent Elliot still delays according obedience to the commands that he should drive away the opium ship within a limited period and that the foreign merchants have denied the ownership of the said vessels and are bent on concealing the real facts, thus contemptuously defying the laws. It is now necessary to adopt severe and energetic measures. A statement of the facts must be laid before the Imperial Government and permission requested to stop the trade, thus stopping up the source of the gain.

But of many foreigners trading at Canton, there are some who have no receiving ships but content themselves with trading in the established and lawful way. These should be allowed to trade as usual: for the innocent must not suffer with the guilty.

Uniting the circumstances we hasten to issue this Edict. On receipt of it let the Hong-merchants instantly set enquiries on foot to ascertain the number and names of those among the many nations who have hitharto traded at Canton who have obeyed the laws and owned no opium ships and likewise those who have disobeyed the laws and established opium vessels. Let them carefully separate the ones from the others and after mature deliberation report the same to us; that having all the real facts laid before us, we may be enabled to discern and act with justice. Let them transmit these orders to the foreign merchants and let them explain to the latter that the Imperial orders on the subject are both urgent and many. No longer will evasion and procrastination be looked over; no longer will they be allowed to loiter about vainly indulging may desires. Let them not imagine the celestial vengeance sleeps.

It must be manifest to all, that by again indulgently issuing an edict the hearts of us the Governor and Lieut.-Governor abound in compassionate tenderness and that justice regulates every line.

Haste! Haste!—A special Edict.

December 22nd.

We hear of two edicts from the Governor being out again within these last days,—the one concerning the hospital ship, in answer to the petition we mentioned last week. The Vice-roy refuses altogether the petitioner's request to have a hospital-ship at Whampoa, and tells them that their saving the ship is the Queen's property is a mere evasion and arrant nonsense. The second chop complains of a prodigious deficiency in the "budget," and threatens to make the Hong merchants answerable for it; foreigners they say load their ships clandestinely outside, and thus evade duty.

The Ann, Pybus, of whose arrival we have just heard, has furnished us with several items in our shipping intelligence, but nothing beyond, her letters not having yet been received. (Friday night.)

The Ariel had just put into Singapore, when the Ann left. We have seen a letter from Capt. Warden, in which he states that on the 17th November, when in Lat. 1S, Long. 11S, within a few miles of the Scarborough shoal they encountered a tyfoong, which laid the vessel on her beam ends, when to save themselves and hull and cargo, the masts were cut away, when she righted. Could in that state not make Manila, so stood for Singapore. The day after the gale saw the Scarborough shoal about two miles to wind, ward. The hull of the vessel is not injured nor is the cargo apparently damaged. The Ariel has proved herself, according to Capt. Warden's account, an excellent seaboat.

The Theodore was lost on the Bolinao reef, Luconia—for particulars we refer to this day's paper.

We hear it said that the Sir Charles Malcolm was seen somewhere to the westward of the Lemmas.

When the Ann left Calcutta, the Cowasjee Family, Syed Khan and Emily Jane had arrived there.

It was feared that the Motichund Amichund from Calcutta, bound for Penang and Singapore, was lost, she having sailed long before the Ann and not been heard of.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS, maintain their price, the supplies by the Copeland being moderate.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, have rather declined, we hear of the sale of a few hundred pieces at about 1.25. LONGELLS, much the same, but the demand not so brisk. CAMBLETS, very depressed.

METALS.—LEAD, has declined, and only $ 6½ is now offered. IRON, importation short, and the market firm.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—Both PEPPER, and BETELNUT, have given way, and the highest price now offered for the former is $ 8½, and for the latter $ 3¼, and little disposition to buy. TIN, has also declined a little.

COTTON,—there have been few sales during the week, and the deliveries are very small. Bombay COTTON, is more depressed than before. About 1000 bales of Bengal were disposed of a day or two since, middling Jalone at 9.5 @ 9.6, and Cutchora a 9.7 @ 9.8. In Madras we have heard of no transactions.

OPIUM.—Without alteration, little or nothing doing in the article, except at Whampoa, where the deliveries are reported to be large, but from the increased quantities brought in at reduced prices. Small shipments are also making to the westward. At Macao however there appears to be very little doing. The Lintin clearances to the 22nd were. Patna, 422; Benares, 46; Malwa, 593; Total 1061 chests.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—We understand the market has at length opened for Nankin Silk and that one or two parcels were purchased yesterday to the extent of about 100 bales at $ 385.—per Pecul: the quality is reported to be but middling Cargo. The silk merchants are still demanding for the fine chops $ 420 @ 440.

TEA.—During this month, and since the beginning of the shipping season, have been despatched for England the following vessels; Jumna, Alexander Baring, Frances Anne, Brothers, Richard Bell, Jamaica, Carnatic Stains Castle and Ingleborough, about 3,500 tons, the aggregate of their Cargoes being, Congou 29,929, Souchong 1,388, Campoy 13, Hong-muey 980, Pekoe 477, Orange Pekoe 290, Hyson 127, Young Hyson 136, Twankay 1,865, Gunpowder 49, Imperial 17. Total 34,500 Piculs and 77 Piculs Raw Silk.

VOL. 3d. No. 18. CANTON, SATURDAY, JANUARY, 6th, 1838. No. 122

TOBACCO.

A friend has sent us Dr. R. D. Mussey's "Essay on the influence of tobacco upon life and health," a little work in which the poisonous qualities of the weed are expatiated upon, and Dr. Mussey supports his antilubulus doctrine with a great array of examples, where the most fatal consequences have followed the use of tobacco. Most of the examples given in this little pamphlet relate to chewing tobacco, a practice in which probably very few of our readers indulge, but snuffing and smoking are also represented as highly injurious to general health. We shall for the present content ourselves with giving the result of some experiments made by the Doctor upon animals by application of the empyreumatic oil of tobacco, as shewing the destructive qualities contained in this plant, when acting on animal life.

EXPERIMENT 1.

A small drop of the oil was rubbed upon the tongue of a large cat. Immediately the animal uttered piteous cries and began to froth at the mouth.

In	1 minute	the pupils of the eyes were dilated, and respiration was laborious.
,,	2½ do.	vomiting and staggering.
,,	4 do.	evacuations; the cries continued, the voice hoarse and unnatual.
,,	5 do.	repeated attempts at vomiting.
,,	7 do.	respiration somewhat improved.

At this time a large drop was rubbed upon the tongue. In an instant the eyes were closed, the cries were stopped, and the breathing was suffocative and convulsed. In one minute the ears were in rapid convulsive motion, and, presently after, tremors and violent convulsions extended over the body and limbs. In three and a half minutes the animal fell upon the side senseless and breathless, and the heart had ceased to beat.

Slight tremors of the voluntary muscles, particularly of the limbs, continued, more or less, for nineteen minutes after the animal was dead. Those of the right side were observed to be more and longer affected than those of the left.

Half an hour after death the body was opened, and the stomach and intestines were found to be contracted and firm, as from a violent and permanent spasm of the muscular coat. The lungs were empty and collapsed. The left side of the heart, the aorta and its great branches were loaded with black blood. The right side of the heart and the two cavæ contained some blood, but were not distended. The pulmonary artery contained only a small quantity of blood. The blood was every where fluid. * * * * *

EXPERIMENT 7.

To the tongue of a dog rather under the middle size, five drops of the oil of tobacco were applied. In forty-five seconds he fell upon the side, got up, retched, and fell again. In one minute the respiration was laborious, and the pupils were dilated. In two minutes the breathing was slow and feeble, with puffing of the cheeks. In three minutes the pupils were smaller but continually varying. The left fore leg and the right hind leg were affected with a simultaneous convulsion or jerk, corresponding with the inspiratory motions of the chest. This continued for five minutes.

In nine minutes alimentary evacuations; symptoms abated; and the animal attempted to walk At ten minutes two drops of the oil were applied to the tongue. Instantly the breathing became laborious, with puffing of the cheeks; pupils much dilated. The convulsive or jerking motions of of the two limbs appeared as before, recurring regularly at the interval of about two seconds, and exactly corresponding with the inspirations In twelve minutes the pupils were more natural; slight frothing at the mouth, the animal still lying upon the side. At this time a drop of the oil was passed into each nostril. The labor of the respiration was suddenly increased, the jaws locked:

In twenta-two minutes no material change; the jaws were separated and five drops of the oil were rubbed on the tongue. In one minute the pupils were entirely dilated, with strong convulsions. In one and an half minutes, in trying to walk, the animal fell. In three minutes the eyes rolled up, and convulsions continued. In six minutes, the plica semilunaris so drawn as to cover half the cornea. In seven minutes, slight frothing at the mouth. In forty minutes, the inspirations were less deep, the convulsions had been unremitted, the strength failing. From this time he lay for more than half an hour nearly in the same state; the strength was gradually sinking, and as there was no prospect of recovery, he was killed. In this case, the true apoplectic puffing of the cheeks was present the great part of the time.

From the foregoing, and from additional experiments, which it is not necessary to give in detail, it appeared, that when applied to a wound made in the most sensitive parts of the integuments, the oil of tobacco, though it caused a good deal of pain, had a far less general effect that when applied to the tongue. Rats were less affected than cats. Two and sometimes three drops rubbed upon the tongue of a rat, did not kill in half an hour.

Three large drops rubbed upon the tongue of a fullsized cat, usually caused death in from three to ten minutes, and in one instance, already stated, in two minutes and forty-five seconds. One drop passed into the jugular vein of a large dog, occasioned an immediate cry, followed in a few moments by staggering, convulsive twitchings of the voluntary muscles, and vomiting

In those cause in which full vomiting occurred, evident relief followed. Young animals suffered much more than those which had come to their full growth and vigor. In those animals, whose lives were suddenly destroyed by the tobacco, no coagulation of the blood took place. The bodies of several cats were examined the next day after death, and only in a single instance was a slight coagulum observed; and this was in a cat, whose constitution possessed strong powers of resistance, and whose death was comparatively lingering.

It is not improbable, that the charge of inhumanity may be made against experiments prosecuted upon defenceless animals, with poison so painful and destructive in its operation as tobacco; the justice of this charge is freely admitted, if such experiments be made merely for the gratification of curiosity, and not with the object and reasonable hope of making them useful to mankind, and of influencing, at least, some few individuals, to abandon the practice (humane can it be called!) of administering this poison to themselves and their children, till it occasions disease and death. Indeed, there are but few, who would willingly witness more than a single experiment of this kind, with no prospect of benefit to result from it.

When applied to sensitive surfaces of considerable extent, even in a form somewhat dilute, tobacco often produces the most serious effects. The tea of tobacco has been known to destroy the life of a horse, when forced into his stomach to relieve indispositions. When used as a wash, to destroy vermin upon certain domesti canimals, tobacco tea has been known to kill the animals themselves. A farmer not long since assured me, that he destroyed a calf in this manner.

LOTTERIES IN SINGAPORE.

Some Chinese were brought before the Magistrates a few days ago, on a charge of keeping a public gambling-house somewhere in town. No further investigation however took place, the prosecutor having kept out of the way on the day appointed for hearing the case at Quarter Sessions, upon an understanding with the alleged delinquents that he should be indemnified in the amount of his forfeited recognizances. The species of gambling which was the subject of the charge is the same, we understand, as that which we remarked on in our last number as having been productive of such ruinous effects in Siam, being here also of comparatively recent introduction, and not unattended with a share of the same disastrous results. It has been reported to us that no less than two cases of suicide have been among the consequences of this deplorable infatuation within the few last months, besides one attempt at self-destruction which was fortunately defeated—the unfortunate victims in each case being women. Information of one of these cases only, that of most recent occurrence, was conveyed to the police—but the relatives of the deceased having been applied to, and denied that she died by her own act, or from any sudden cause, but from a malady under which she had been long labouring, enquire proceeded no further. Her husband, however, or the man with whom she had been living, communicated to several of his Chinese countrymen the fact of her having died by her own hands; and, according to the statement which he is reported to have made, he was induced by her to leave the house and repair to the gambling-shop to enter a small stake, in order that she might be left to the undisturbed accomplishment of her fatal purpose. On his return he found her hanging, a corpse,—and a search into his money chest, and store of valuables, of which she kept the key, with a knowledge that she frequently resorted to the gaming-shop, soon disclosed to him the cause which prompted this desperate act. Not a dust, or single convertible article remained to him. In the other case the woman also perished in the same manner—and was led to her death by the same cause. The other woman whose attempted suicide was prevented, had ignorantly entered up her stake on a particular number, but without having once succeeded. On the very day on which she found herself without a farthing to stake, the number which had so long been inauspicious to her turned up the winning one! Driven frantic at the thought of her bad fortune, she repaired to her house, shut herself up in a room and proceeded to put her fatal design into execution. Her husband with some friends burst open the door of the chamber in which she had secluded herself, and encountered the spectacle of his wife hanging by the neck from a beam that crossed the room—our informant held her up in his arms while the former cut with an axe the cord by which she was suspended. She had not been long enough in this horrible situation to extinguish life—and the poor woman is now restored to health, and we hope to a just sense of the infatuation which hurried her on to a criminal attempt upon her own life.

It has been also stated to us that there have occurred other cases of a similar description, all traceable to the same fatal source—and that the mischief and disorder in other respects which this passion for Hue Hue is producing among families, is lamentable in the highest degree. The women too are the most liable to its fascinations—selling or pawning their ornaments and clothes and robbing their husbands to supply the means of trying their fortune—and, as we are informed, the pernicious effects of the game upon the softer sex are so well known in China that it is there totally prohibited under heavy penalties. From the account however which we have received of the game it does not appear to us particularly calculated to produce to such an extent that blind passion which leaves every other object out of consideration in its pursuit, beyond other descriptions of gambling that we have heard of. It is briefly this. There are thirty numbers or tickets, each bearing a particular name, in the possession of the holder of the bank—when a person wishes to enter a stake, he inscribes the name of one of these tickets on a piece of paper, which is then carefully folded up and sealed, the amount of the stake and the name of the party being written outside. This, with the sum staked, is handed to the bank-holder, who deposits the paper in a box, where it remains until opened at the drawing. When as many as are desirous have entered, he then draws one of the thirty six tickets from the bag in which they are contained, and opens it—the tickets of those who have staked are then also opened, and all those who have staked upon the same number as the ticket drawn by the bank-holder are winners, and receive back thirty times the amount of their stake—those who have been less fortunate receive nothing at all—and there may thus be many winners, but only one winning number. Sometimes the bank is broken, and is unable to pay the winner, when the most uproarious scene ensues An instance of this occurred very recently—a party had staked 11 Dollars on the number Cheeko, which was that drawn by the banker, who had of course to pay down 30 times the stake, being 420 Dollars. The money was not forthcoming, and a scuffle ensued in which the friends of both parties engaged, the head and face of the winning man being so severely handled that he went to the police to make his complaint—but kept out of view entirely the circumstance in which it originated. A compromise however, as always happens on such occasions, was effected and the aggrieved party pacified, if not satisfied.

It is notorious that gambling shops have long been maintained here by the connivance of the police, and no one we will be ignorant enough to think that Hue Hue shops is but one of the numerous other disreputable establishment. The Gambling-farm has in fact only been done away with in name. The exclusive privilege is as regularly farmed out as before; only the Government are not the farmers. Under such a state of things the wages of the police subordinates are merely a secondary consideration, when compared with the other advantages which the appointage of a belt bestows—and the persons and others connected with the police are always look sharp upon, and generally found to be, by far the most substantial people of any in their walk of life in the Settlement. Of course they are as inefficient as can be, and this is all we have got in exchange for the abolition of the gambling-farm. It would be much better to proclaim at once that people were at liberty to gamble in their own houses—it would not increase the vice greatly, and would take away the necessity of bribing the police—or else some new system ought to be adopted effectually to check both evils. But in the meantime some vigorous measures ought to be pursued to repress the Hue Hue establishments, which daily give birth to such frightful consequences as those we have exemplified.d.

LATEST EUROPE NEWS.

SPAIN.

The 24th ult. was celebrated at Madrid as the birthday of the Queen. A deputation of the Cortes was sent to congratulate her Majesty on the happy event. The new Cortes, an extraordinary assembly, are summoned for the 19th November, under the forms prescribed by the new constitution, and the new electoral law.

Pallila, a Carlist chief, kept the road from Madrid, through Andalusia; he had burned mail coaches, diligences, and waggons, loaded with goods, in all sixteen vehicles.

The Carlist general, Zariategui, had an encounter with the Baron dat Antas on the 21st, and (as he says) obtained a signal advantage over the Portuguese auxiliaries under that Christino leader. Escalera was following Zariategui.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Bayonne, July 28th, says—"Don Carlos has re-entered Cantavieja, and it is said that he is ill. The Groops and the bands of Arragon and Valencia have united there. Espartero and Oraa have taken that direction, and are going to besiege the place."

The Catalonian bands, whom the Baron de Meer hitherto found no difficulty in repressing, are mustering, one after another, the small towns near the frontier. They took Berga not long since, and the baron failed in retaking it. They took Ripoll on the 27th ult. by capitulation, the garrison being let pass to Olot, Puycerda, or France. The Catalonian chief Urbistondo was on the 29th ult. menacing Campredon and St. Juan de las Abadesas.

The Carlists under Castor, in the north, relieved of the presence of Escalera, who, with a considerable force, follows the expedition of Zariategui, have outflanked Castenedo, and have come down before St. Sebastian. Two Sardinian brigs, one with supplies for Don Carlos, the other with 10,000 muskets, have been captured by the English cruizers, and given up to the authorities.

Of the two German officers who accompanied the Carlist expedition, M. de Plessen has been killed, and Prince Lichnowski has returned in disgust. In order to replace these commissaries of the Holy Alliance, Colonel Kaiserling has resigned his regiment in the Prussian service, and proceeds to join Don Carlos.

SICILY.

The Paris papers contain much alarming news from Palermo. The people were in a state of full insurrection. The Viceroy had been killed, and those who have the means have enclosed themselves with provisions for a month in their houses, which they have fortified against the assaults of the mob as well as contagion with the affected. The daily deaths by cholera amounted to a thousand, and the people are in such a state of irritation that they will not submit to the troops that have been sent from Naples to restore order.

HANOVER.

The Auxburgh Gazette gives the following, under the date of Hanover, July 18:—"The Catholic bishop of Hildesheim has been very graciously received by the King. His Majesty assured him that his sentiments with regard to the Catholics in Ireland were purely political, and that, as Sovereign of Hanover, he should make no distinction between his subjects of different religions."

"The people," says the German Courier, "love and honour their King, who walks about dressed in the simplest taste, and talks to the citizens he meets in broken German, which they can scarcely understand."

AMERICA.

The Governor of the state of Maine has issued a very stirring proclamation to the militia of the state, calling on them to hold themselves in readiness to resist what he calls "British aggression" over the Maine frontier. No acts of violence, however, have taken place, though the excitement is great.

Considerable anxiety is felt in all parts of the country on the subject of the Indian war in Florida. The accounts received within the last few days previous to the sailing of the packet, were chiefly remarkable for their very contradictory character; but it is feared that those of an unfavourable complexion will be confirmed.

The recent commercial and monetary difficulties have been favourable to the growth of Texas, in causing great numbers to emigrate to that fertile region.

There are rumours afloat that the banks will resume specie payments at an earlier period than had been anticipated, and hints were thrown out that the Bank of the United States would take the lead, Mr. Biddle of course to have the credit of bringing about "consummation sedevently to be wished."—Atlas 6th August.

LAUNCH OF THE GREAT WESTERN STEAM SHIP.

(From the Morning Herald, July 21.)

This magnificent steam ship of 400 horse power, built for the purpose of running between Bristol and New York, was launched this morning. The number of persons who attended to witness the launch must have been upwards of 20,000. The launch itself may be judged of from the fact that it did not displace a single plate on the tables of the cabin, which had previously been laid out with a sumptuous dejeune a la fourchette, to which, upon the vessel having been brought alongside the yard, about 300 ladies and gentlemen, of the highest respectability, sat down. Mr. Maze presided, and was supported by Mr. Miles, late M. P. for the eastern division of Somerset, Mr. George, the mayor, Col. Wheatley, Majors Worsnall and Kington, Captains Corrville and Shute, the American consul, Mr. Bessel, &c. After the company had done justice to the deliceacies of the table, they were addressed by the chairman, Mr. Miles, Mr. Blaxton, Mr. Kingston, and others, upon the advantages likely to be derived by the port of Bristol from a trade carried on by it with the United States, through a line of steam ships. Some excellent observations were made upon the enterprising spirit which has recently been manifested by the commercial interest of Bristol, and the great cotton factory in the course of erection, and the Western Railway, were mentioned as indications of the advantages shortly of be looked for from the operation of that spirit. The construction of this great steam ship was spoken of in the highest terms by several naval and scientific gentlemen present, all of whom united in declaring it to be one of the finest and strongest steam vessels ever built.—Calcutta Courier, 15 November.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

SHIP GLENSTANES, CAPTAIN BROWN.

On the 9th of June last, the Ship Glenstanes, Capt. Brown, of London, steering west under single reefed topsails, at sunset, saw an island, bearing S. W. by S. at about 12 or 15 miles distance. Hove to with the main yard aback; headed South by East: Having a strong, northerly current for the 24 hours before, the Captain thought the ship would only "hold her own" against the current, he left orders with the officer of the watch to wear ship at 12 o'clock, or when the S. W. by S. the third officer, (in charge of the watch on deck,) called down the skylight, in a confused manner, and said he thought there was a reef under the ship's lee; the Captain and Officers immediately jumped upon deck, and finding the ship surrounded by a reef, the helm was put up; endeavours were made to "wear ship," but in consequence of being so close to the reef, the ship unfortunately struck. The Captain immediately ordered the boats to be lowered down, but only three could be got away; the Captain, officers, and crew laid off, at a little distance from the wreck until daylight; at that time, finding the surf so heavy that it was considered impossible to board the vessel, the boats went in search of a leading place; and after pulling about fifteen miles, one was discovered: The spare hands were landed, and resaired to the wreck inside of the lagoon, by which the island is nearly surrounded: Two canoes,—when had been left on board on the night of the wreck, unknown,—when the boats returned, were found in a state of intoxication, and were not able to render any assistance to the boats. Two of the men from the boats, swam on board, through a heavy surf, and got away the favourable; after which some of the rest of the crew were enabled to board the wreck. That night a little bread and water and a few clothes were saved from the wreck; but, in consequence of the increase of the surf the officers and crew in the boats were obliged to quit the reef. One of the men left on board, intoxicated, jumped overboard while the boats were at the reef. The next day the ship went to pieces owing to the high state of the surf. A raft was saved from the wreck consisted of sixteen casks of bread, eighteen casks of flour, and one cask of salt provisions, besides a few casks of oily water; all hands were upon an allowance of this miserable water, of two wine bottles per diem for seven weeks. The time passed upon the Island, (supposed to be Ocean Island, in the latitude of 28, 32, north and longitude 179. 30 West,)—was spent picking up the remains of the wreck, for the construction of a small vessel, and in building the said vessel.

The keel of the vessel,—(which was thirty eight feet long, and twelve feet and a half beam, with seven feet depth of hold,—was laid two weeks after the ship was lost; three months were occupied in building the vessel; The axes and adzes necessary in the building of the craft were manufactured from the whale spades; the sagurs and chisels, of the lances, and the bellows, for the use of the black-smith by whose ingenuity the above tools were contrived, was composed principally of the canvass, belonging to the ship. The boat was caulked with a sort of chunam, made, (for want of pitch &c.) of flour and seal oil.

On the 12th of October the boat was launched and, most appropriately named the DELIVERANCE. On the 15th. Captain Brown, the Chief Mate, and eight men, sailed for the Sandwich Islands; after having a favourable passage of fourteen days the Deliverance spoke the American Ship Timoleon, Captain Bunker, in the latitude of 29.30 and longitude 160 W. Captain Bunker abundantly supplied the sufferers with provisions, of which they were very much in want; since speaking the above ship, the passage to this islands has been attended with very rough weather.

In longitude 176. W. Latitude 28. 30. N. the Deliverance passed through a large body of sperm whales; for the space of three hours the schooner was surrounded by them.

It is said that a vessel will be sent immediately for the remainder of the crew, twenty three in number,—who are now on the islands.

The above are the particulars of the awful disaster of the Ship Gleadstanes as furnished us by Captain Brown.

Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon Captain Brown for his enterprise in the contraction of the Schooner Deliverance; to him, and the officers and the part of the crew, who assisted him, is due the deepest gratitude of all the survivers of the Gleadstanes; it is not our design to flatter, but we cannot restrain the emotions of real satisfaction and heartfelt joy with which we were inspired, when, yesterday afternoon, after the Deliverance came to anchor, we visited the vessel: She was built of the fragments of a ships wreck; she was constructed upon a mere hank of card; (a freak of the ocean's mirth justly named "Ocean Island,")—the tools, employed by the self-taught artisans from whose ingenious perseverance she derived her existence were formed from the pittance of the precious metal,—(not gold, but iron we mean,)—which the sea vouchsafed to the sufferers: The very safety of the shipwrecked was confided to the sheet of the beech, upon which Providence conducted them:—for, (we be eto explain,) the calcined shells gathered upon the shore; added to the oil of the seal found also, there, supplied the material required to fill the seams of the Deliverance.

That "necessity is the mother of invention," is an old adage; and so is the saying "ex nihilo nihil fit" but we challenge a stronger corroboration of both the ancient "saws"—than the one above cited.—Sandwich Island Gazette, November 11th, 1837.

The late remarkable tide. We noticed, briefly, in our last, the occurrence of a remarkable fluctuation of the tide, at this island: The singularity of the phenomenon, has given rise to much speculation among the many who observed it.

"The sea is dry! and the ships are stranded!" This announcement, followed by a strange shouting from the voices of hundreds of curious souls, who rushed "en masse" to the beach on the evening of Tuesday the seventh instant,—roused us, in trepidation, from the tea table: We dashed into the vortex of wonderers and stopped only at the sea side, where we found enough of the population of Honolulu to have constituted an impartial census, congregated in a shudder struck group, clamorously contemplating a most curious freak of nature.

Soon after six o'clock, on Tuesday evening the sea fell very rapidly, about eight feet, leaving several vessels aground; the weather was clear and pleasant. Thermometer at 74. 5 Barometer 30. 06. fine breeze from the N. E. squally at intervals. The water, after remaining stationary a few seconds rose again to the ordinary high water mark, and at 6 hours 40 minutes again receded 4 feet 6 inches perpendicularly, in twenty seven minutes, it then again rose to the same height as before and fell again six feet three inches; the third time it rose four inches higher than before; after the fourth all the ebb and flow, which had hitherto occupied about twenty eight minutes each, gradually diminished and varied in time, flowing in ten and ebbing in twenty minutes; this continued during the night and part of Wednesday forenoon; the rapidity with which the water rose and fell varied considerably in different parts of the harbor. At no time did the water rise above high water mark, altough it fell nearly six feet below low water mark: Towards midnight the wind subsided and much rain fell, but there were no unusual atmospheric appearances or any trembling of the earth; the whole commotion appeared to be in the sea.

The same phenomenon occured at these Islands in May 1819 without any earthquake here or at the other Islands.

CALIFORNIA.

The Sarah and Caroline has arrived. The Griffon and Bolivar are expected shortly. California, it appears, is in a doleful situation at present. Business is dragging heavily, while governmental affairs are melancholy. So far as we can judge, (by the aggregate of public and private information;) the pleasures of an existence at California are so far outnumbered by the grievances of life, that negative enjoyment, and positive satisfactions, are as scarce as snow banks in July, at Honolulu, Oahu, Sandwich Islands. We do not mean to put our patrons, whose interests are wrapped up in the trade of California, into a fever, neither do we wish to manufacture their sympathies into the shape of an icicle; but we do wish to convey the impression to those of our friends, who look to our columns for the truth, that the state of business on the coast of California, is so far from being favourable to the interests of maritime and commercial enterprise, that it begins to savour, most decidedly, of the real seasoning of positive ill luck.

The Californians have returned to their allegiance with Mexico. The Californians know their own business, as we have, before, asserted: And we hope they will enjoy comfort, quiet, and respectability, under the flag of Mexico: At the same time we are not aware that we err in judgment when we say that a country should govern itself, and not have to the uproar strine of its mother, after it is capable of breathing without foreign aid. However, as we are not a politician we leave alone dabbling in Californian governmental matters.

Don Carlos Carillo, as we are apprised, has been appointed by the President of Mexico, Governor of Upper and Lower California: It is supposed this gentleman will give satisfaction to the country, and rule justly: It is probable he will enter upon the duties of this office immediately.

Our scanty notes, carelessly gleaned from our letters and from casual information, are finished thus; whatever California may do for herself, whatever the efforts of her government may accomplish towards her success, may it be her lot to gain a higher and higher station in the list of nations; and prove, by her own deeds, that she is a country, among a regiment of countries, marching towards the acme of prosperity.—Sandwich Island Gazette 18 November 1837.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Sir,—Among the numerous writers in your ably conducted paper, I have lost sight of one, whose short but brilliant carrier shed a lustre on your columns. What has become of Sebastian? Why sleepeth the Spaniard? Is his task accomplished? Hath he "buried the war hatchet," and is he now reposing luxuriously in his tent, inhaling the fumes of his much loved weed, indulging in calm contemplation and mayhap at times in his reveries communing with the "departed spirits of the mighty dead," on the shores of the dreaming Land? Or now that his "wrath is wreaked" hath he bid adieu to this land of despotism? and is he now wending on his pilgrimage towards the clines of the setting sun to that land of freedom, that "gem of the sea, where the weak, desolate and oppressed ever find protection. But, if still in the Celestial Regions, let him start again to life, let him shake off this epicurean indolence—let not the bowstring of his spirit be slack—let him gird up his loins, resume his able pen, and depict in glowing colours the follies of the day. —Let him again delight us, by giving to the world, his thoughts that breathe, his words that burn"!—Let him appear among us "like a warrior bounding on his barb"—let him draw his battle brand in the shape of a Bramah and weld it manfully for the benefit and protection of the good and true, and the total discomfiture and disgrace of the false, and unworthy, —let him expose to the world in language which I am not possessed of, the inhuman, not to say bungling policy of infatuated skippers, who "clothed in a little brief authority" play such fantastic tricks as to forcibly detain in their possession private letters, containing the affectionate greetings of friends far distant and perhaps long separated, or mayhap the fond effusions of sorrowing hearts, pining in widowhood of soul for the absent:—Let him explain to such misguided men, the breac of trust involved in detaining others of graver in art for the furtherance of their own private and selfish views.—Let him instil into their minds, that if they persist in steering this mistaken and tortuous course, that, instead of having their names enrolled among a class of Britain's noblest sons, her intrepid but warm hearted sailors, that they will become a "hissing and a reproach," and a mark for the finger of scorn to point at.

Once more awake Sebastian, why sleepest thou?
"Thy path tho' full of thorns is plain;"
"Smooth be the verse, and easy be the strain"

I am, Mr. Editor,
— Yours truly.
GRATIANO.

A POETICAL GENIUS. In a city well known to every body, if they can find out the name, a poetical genius was hauled up before a police Magistrate charged with kissing a girl and kicking up a dust in the street, and the following poetical dialogue ensued:—

Magistrate.—Is your name John Jay?
Prisoner.—Yes your honour, so the people say.
Magistrate.—Was it you who kissed the girl and raised the alarm?
Prisoner.—Yes, your honour but I thought it was no harm.
Magistrate.—You rascal do you come here to make rhymes?
Prisoner.—No, your honour, but t'will happen to some times.
Magistrate.—Be off you scamp, get out of my sight
Prisoner.—Thank-e, your honour, then I'll bid you good night. English paper.

The following, in the Hawaii language end copied from the Sandwich Island Gazette, will, we doubt not, appear a forcible argument to our readers.

"Ina hiki oe a hala na makahiki he kanaka aole no e loaa wale mai ia oe ka waiwai nui. Aole pela ka loaa o ka waiwai i kahaki poe ma ke as nei. Ke manao nei anei oukou he mea loaa wale ka waiwai i ka poe kuko? Aole loa. Aole ulu wale ka waiwai ma ka nonua ner. O ka opala a me ka naaehehele ke ulu wale; aka o ka ai, o ka lole, a o ke dala, he mea loaa i ma ka hana wale no."

CANTON PRESS,

6th January, 1838.

The Cowasjee Family from Calcutta 19th November, and Singapore 9th December, has brought us Calcutta papers to the 18th November and the Singapore Free Press to the 7th December. The Opium sales were to take place as follows.

	Patna,	Benares,
2 January,	4,600	2,400	7,000	Chests.
2 February,	.....	.....	2,300	,,
20 April	.....	.....	4,000	,,
20 May,	.....	.....	2,000	,,
25 June,	.....	.....	3,800	,,
			19,100	Chests.

The Calcutta deliveries of Opium during the year up to the 15th November had been, of Patna 8,968; Benares 4,935; Total 13,921 Chests. Remaining in the Company's Godowns, Patna 2,199; Benares 1,137; Total 3,226 Chests.

The Syed Khan was the last arrival from China in Calcutta when the Cowasjee Family came away, and the unfavorable advices she conveyed had the effect of reducing the prices of Opium materially. Patna declined from 1,150 to 1,030 and Benares from 1,120 @ 1,020, and when the Cowasjee Family left, holders were anxious to sell under these rates, and as the Ruby, then daily expected, would confirm the accounts of the China market, taken by the Syed Khan, a further decline would doubtless take place.

The Cowasjee Family brings we hear, about 650 Chests, and the Syed Khan daily expected, about 400. Ariel 900.

The Ariel was to leave Singapore about the 20th December. The Red Rover and Rob Roy both arrived in Singapore on the 9th December.

The Singapore from London 6th August had arrived at Singapore and the following are the latest commercial news she brings. "No more failures had occurred, money had become plentiful, and some articles of produce were looking up, although there was not much doing. Tentlee was the only sales were noticed at an advance, 500 bales having been sold at 17s, and some holders refused to sell at that, expecting a rise, as the Italian crop, it was said, had fallen short of last year's supply about 450,000 lbs. Cassia continued dull at 45 @ 50. The elections were going on with great spirit. The returns at the end of August amounted to 344, of which 197 were ministerial, and 147 conservative, and it was generally thought the ministerial majority would be somewhat less than last parliament. The country was in such a state of excitement that no material improvement in commercial matters was expected, until the elections had all closed.

The Revd. Doctor Parker has communicated to us the following. "In an excursion upon the water last evening (January 2d) with some friends, our attention was attracted by the corpse of an adult, floating up with the tide in the Macao Passage, nearly opposite the Macao station. As we passed near it I observed that it was not a Chinese, which awakened further interest. We put the boat about and ascertained that it was the body of a Caffer, probably 40 years of age. There was also observed a discoloration, or settling of blood, about the neck and on one side of the face, that suggested at the moment that possibly he might have experienced a violent death. Unable satisfactorily to account for the presence of such a corpse in the vicinity of Canton, for it cannot be supposed that the body had been floated from Macao; neither am I aware that it is customary there to commit slaves to a watery grave: * and had he died on board ship, it is to be presumed the master of the vessel would have seen the body properly disposed of. By giving notice in your paper of the above circumstance, further information may be obtained, and desirable disclosures made of the cause of the poor man's death, and of the presence of the body in the immediate vicinity of Canton.

We have received a file of Sandwich Islan: Gazettes up to the 18th November, and have made several extracts from them. The Editor of that paper complains of not having received our paper in exchange for his; we should have sent it, had we been aware of an opportunity to send it—we shall however avail ourselve of the first vessel to send a file, and continue doing so by all subsequent opportunities. The Sandwich Island Gazette is filled with discussions on the expulsion of two Catholic Missionaries from Tahaiti under circumstances of considerable personal inconvenience and even violence, and we regret to find that the protestant missionaries are accused of having influenced the King to commit this act of hostility upon two subjects of France. The correspondence on the subject is very long, and the Gazette has opened it's columns to both parties, disapproving however strongly the act of expulsion and the religious persecution which seems to have been the cause of it.

The following has been kindly communicated to us by a passenger per the Europe from the Sandwich Islands.

"General Ramon Freire; Don Ramon Buenrostro; Col. Salvador Puga; Captain Pablo Huerta and Don Vicente Urbistondo, five of the Gentlemen lately banished by the Chilian Government to N. S. Wales, arrived at the Island of Tahiti on the 25th of last September in the English Barque Vesper.

The three latter named gentlemen took their passage in the ship Europe for the Sandwich Islands; and from that port they intended leaving by the first opportunity for South America.

General Freire and Don Ramon Buenrostro remained at Tahiti; with the intention (I understood) of soliciting a passage to Valparaiso, in H. B. M. Ship Imogene, which vessel was then daily expected at Tahiti and destined for Valparaiso."

THE HING-TAE AFFAIRS.

To His Excellency the Vice-roy of Canton &c.

Your Excellency's edict of 17th inst. in reply to our petition of 15th, was handed to us by the Senior Hong-merchants, and at same time a proposal was made to liquidate the debts of the Hing-tae Hong in twelve years—a proposition unjust, in as far as it is directly contrary to the established practice of the Celestial Empire and the interpretation former Governors have put upon the laws of the great Emperor, and most unreasonable in itself, seeing that the usual interest during the proposed period would amount to twice the capital debt.

We have most carefully examined your Excellency's observations respecting the "fixed laws of the Heavenly Dynasty, and beg humbly, but firmly, to state to your Excellency that the laws quoted are not those applicable to Foreigners—which, we need not point out to your Excellency, are entirely distinct from those laws by which the subjects of the Empire are regulated.

Your Excellency's reasoning upon the liability of the Co-hong, we have only to place in context with the Imperial orders, which distinctly engage that all foreign debts shall be paid, and your Excellency has been graciously pleased to repeat this engagement on the part of government more than once. Why then should your Excellency ask us "from whom would you recover should the Hong-merchants seek to be preserved from the consequences of thus being, by the laws pointed out as the securities and compulsory payers of bankrupt Hong debts? The answer is plain and distinct, we have the Emperor's repeated promise as well as your Excellency's that our claims shall be paid to the uttermost mite. The celestial Empire is our debtor—the hong-merchants hitherto have been the channel of payment, but we look to your Excellency making such payment and leaving the mode to be settled as the Celestial justice may deem most right, it not becoming us to point out to your Excellency the manner by which the Empire may discharge its debts.

With regard to the assertion that a Consoo duty has been levied, for the purpose of paying Hong debts to foreigners, for three years without any drain for this purpose, it is strictly and positively true; nearly four years have now elapsed since any payment to foreigners has been made, and justice requires that the sum so collected should be immediately appropriated to this liquidation of existing foreign debts. There is no law of the Imperial Dynasty warranting the appropriation of this tax to any other purpose.

In conclusion we must remind your Excellency that former claims of a similar nature have frequently been paid,—this is no new affair. The sums formerly paid for a series of years have been upwards of 5 lacs of dollars per antiun, one year, 1829, indeed the amount approached 6½ lacs of dollars; a similar payment for the next 4 years would pay all our claims with interest; for how, in cutting off so large a proportion from our claims, can Your Excellency keep your promise to pay us the uttermost mite?

Trusting your Excellency will spare us the unpleasant task of appealing either to the Emperor or to our own August Sovereign for the settlement of these our just claims on the Chinese Empire, we are etc.

Signed by Hing-tae's Creditors.

We hoped to have been able to lay before our readers, together with the above letter from the creditors, to which no answer has yet been received, a translation of a report to the Governor, from the judge and treasurer respecting the Hing-tae affairs, but several dispatches for England and India having interfered, we are now obliged to delay giving a translation until our next, contenting ourselves with a brief outline of the document, which was received before the above letter was sent to the Governor. It will be seen from it that the authorities look upon the wish of the Hong-merchants to pay in 12 years in annual instalments, with a favorable eye, and that, unless the creditors can obtain more powerful interference than mere correspondence, they stand but very little chance of obtaining more than a promise to pay in 12 years, which promise, judging from the present state of most of the Hongs, appears to be perfectly nugatory, it being more than probable that many of them will not last until the last term of payment of the Hing-tae debt.

Abstract of the report of the two Sees.

"It is from the Judge and Treasurer and acknowledges a petition from the Hong-merchants in which they state that, having made a proposal to the foreigners to pay the Hing-tae debts in 15 years which was strictly refused, they consented to propose 12 years which was also laughed at, the foreigners being clamorous for the debts being paid in five or six years. They say that King-qua's debts are now the heaviest, and they fear that, if they are hurried, that Hong will also break and leave them answerable for the debts of that Hong also, which will nearly ruin them all. They therefore entreat their Excellency to pity them and insist upon the foreigners acquiescing in the period of 12 years.

The judge and treasurer state that, according to the laws of the Heavenly Dynasty, the foreigners have forfeited all claim to payment by not annually petitioning the Hoppo as to the extent of the claims on the Hongs; but nevertheless, say they, so intense is the celestial mercy and benevolence that they rather than see us lose our money will allow the Hong-merchants to pay us in 12 years: and if our hearts do not burst with gratitude at this truly they must be made of stone or wood.

As to Jardine, trusting the Hong with such an immense amount, they are at aloss to understand what schemes they have been concocting. For seven years they have not said one word about the matter.

They now order the Hong-merchants to come to some immediate settlement with the foreigners as to the period in which the Hing-tae debts shall be paid and to report of same."

(From the Chinese Repository for December.)

Chinese marriage rules. In the Illustrations of Rites it is said: "The man and woman, no matchmaker having gone between them, must not know the names of each other. Presents not having been received, no intercourse or intimacy between them is admisible. Therefore, to mark clearly this line of separation, the day and month of their marriage are reported to the prince, and with fasting announced to the deceased ancestors, while friends and fellow-officers are invited to an entertainment of wine and food. When marrying, take not a wife of the same family name; therefore, when purchasing a concubine, if ignorant of her family name, have recourse to divination."

The Rules of Marriage contain these instructions: "The father, presenting wine to the son, commands him saying, 'Go and receive your consort, and with her sustain the honors of my family; urge and persuade her with respect to succeed her mother-in-law; and in these duties be you constant.' The son answers, 'I will; though I fear my inadequacy for these duties, yet I dare not forget your commands.' When presenting a daughter in marriage, her father commands her saying, 'Be careful, day and night let there be no opposition to commands. The mother, presenting a small girdle and a folded napkin, says, 'Be attentive and respectful, day and night fail not in housewifery.' The stepmother (the father's concubine) at the door within, presenting a large girdle, and repeating the instructions of the father and mother, commands her saying, 'Respectfully listen to and honor the words of your father and mother: day and night, in order that you may not err, look on your girdle.'"

Burning of opium. The traffic in opium was to be stopped many months ago; certain merchants were to be expelled from Canton; and the receiving ships sent home. Such were the orders: the facts are these—the traffic has been continued, at Lintin, at other anchorages far northward on the coast, at Macao, while thousands of chests have entered the Bogue, and not a little of the drug has found its way, in foreign vessels to Whampoa, and in foreign boats to Canton. Smugglers, and smuggling boats, have been seized in great numbers. And to crown the farce, local authorities go in state to the place of military parade and burn the drug; the transaction is duly reported in the provincial court circular, and will forever stand on the records of the fooyuen's office! Now no one, who knows the Chinese, believes that a pound of opium was burnt; while every one does know that official boats have been the chief agents in carrying the drug!—Ibid.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—White and brown LONGCLOTHS, are in good demand. COTTON YARN, is without enquiry.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, without improvement or transactions. LONGELLS, as before, for assorted, but scarlets have advanced a little more.—CAMBLETS, are without demand.

METALS.—LEAD, is declining; IRON, without alteration, there being no late importation.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—BETELNUT, and PEPPER, have still further declined, as also TIN.

COTTON.—Bengal is a little more in demand, and for fair Banda 10.2 is offered; Bombays are however as depressed as ever, and sales of only small lots have taken place. No sales of Madras during the week. The clearances in December are reported.

including all the late arrivals.

OPIUM.—There is no material alteration to notice in this article. The prices have rather declined since the arrival of the Ann and the Cowasjee, and almost the only sales made are at Whampoa, where the deliveries have been large in December. For those at Lintin see above.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN SILK.—Since our last nearly 1000 bales have been purchased at from 385 for middling cargo to 440 for the finest, purchasers having been encouraged by late advices from England of a slight advance, and the rumours of a short supply from India and Italy. The entire quantity yet down is about 4,000 bales, but present prices will induce a further supply.

TEA.—We do not hear of any purchases of Hyson for the English market yet. Fine Twankay of Hyson kind in half chests has been sold as high as 28 T. but no general price has been settled for this description of tea. The teamen would take 18 T. for good, but there are no buyers.

CORRESPONDECE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Sir,—Will you oblige me by inserting a few lines in reply to an attack made on my veracity, seamanship &c., by Capt. Horsman in your paper of the 30th ult. I shall say little on his pretty and witty play on the word "Julia", it is too boyish; the attempt to ridicule only proves the writer's consciousness of a bad cause My letter to the Singapore Editor was written before Capt. H's departure from Singapore. I had found from all who spoke to me on the Editor's former notice of the accident that the common impression was "that the Sussex, being bound to Singapore, was standing to the Eastward," which was not the case; (by the bye Capt. H. thinks it better not to quote that part of my letter) this public error was highly unfavorable to me, for, had he been on his proper course, he might have had some excuse for so very "lubberly" running stem on to me. I again repeat, the disaster "was not occasioned by a heavy squall." Capt. H., by implying that it did, forgets he was carrying top gallt sails; there had been squalls and my topsails were then lowered; there were six ships inside of the Carimons, one was at anchor, four ships lying to under their topsails, the Sussex was the only ship cruizing about and the only one whose reckoning was so bad as to be "found suddenly at the back of Tree Island," the most dangerous mistake that could be committed between England and China. I do not understand what Capt. H. means by "manufacturing a log-book for a notary public," it was written with strict regard to truth, knowing it would be attested to on oath by myself and officers; there is nothing contradictory in it; the ship was have to, the main topsail a back, the fore and mizen topsails full all lowered down, the lead-line over the quarter watching the drift. Capt. H's. experience has not yet taught him, it appears, that all ships drift when lying to; had Capt. H. shivered his after yards or at least hauled his driver up when he put his helm "aport" he would have gone clear of us. As the whole occurence is open to desmonstration, with respect to seamanship, at a proper time and place, when Capt. H. may have golden reasons to see his error, I shall not waste time and your paper on the subject

There is one glaring contradiction in Capt. H's. letter; if I had thought his ship on the starboard tack, how was it possible that I could have asked him "why did you not put your helm aport?" The truth is I hailed him with a speaking trumpet to do so, knowing I was myself on the starboard tack. If the weather was not too thick for one to see his ship, why did he not see my light? Capt. H. seems to boast that his ship was going ten knots, he does not see how this operates against him in such a place, at such a time, and going from his port; he says the Sussex passed like lightning, but came back under very easy sail!!!

I did not intentionally treat Capt. Horsman with incivility when he came on board. I mistook him for some junior officer. He acknowledged that he heard me hail him to anchor, and replied "I did not know where I was then;" when I firs. requested him to take me in tow, his reply was "I must first see where I am;" it was then day light. I confess this silly answer made me speak warmly, and I answered "you should have known that, Sir, before you left your ship; I know where I am." The Sussex just before the tow rope was cut, to the westward of the Gonoy, had all her sails a back and her helm the wrong way. I dont know how many men the Sussex's boats had, perhaps "sixteen," certainly only three or four came on board my ship. Capt. H. had been twice on board before he sent the tow rope, and was not in either of the boats that brought it, he had previously refused to wait for my weighing my anchor which was slipped.

On the question of humanity which seems to hurt him so much, let others judge; every seaman would had hove to or anchored, instead of running out of sight.

Capt. H. plays much on "scattered friends;" I am proud to say I have friends scattered all over the globe, and my seamanship, which he holds so lightly, has carried me to every principal port of the world. In my extract from the log I suppressed what I thought would be unfavourable to Capt. H.; with his pretended contempt for every thing relating to a small ship, it would have been wise had he not noticed it. I overlook the scurrilous phrases in his letter, and can excuse the want of seamanship of so young an officer, and give him credit for being "guilty of commanding a large ship"

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
R. RICHARDS.

Lintin, 4th January, 1838.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS.

Sir,—I have just received a letter from Captain Hamilton, and herewith send you an extract explaining the cause of the detention of the letters by the 'Anna Robertson,' to the truth of which I can certainly bear testimony, having been present at the altercation with the boatmen.

Having inserted the letter of your correspondent 'N N,' so injurious to Capt. Hamilton's character and interests, you are bound, in common justice to that gentleman, to lay before your readers the following statement of the actual facts of the case.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. C. DOMETT.

Canton, January 6th 1838.

Extract from Capt. Hamilton's letter, dated Lintin, January 4th 1838.

"I have just received your letter together with a "number of the Canton Press, in which I see there "are some scurrilous and most unfounded remarks "passed on me by a person who signs himself N N. "I shall therefore feel greatly obliged by your "forwarding the following statement, (to part of "which I think you can testify) to the same paper, "and by acquainting any person, who may ask you, "with the real merits of the case.

"You are well aware that it was my intention "to have taken the letters up with me, and, in fact, "they were on deck for that purpose, had not the "'fast boat men' refused to receive them.—My "chief officer fully expected they had gone, and accordingly sent Capt. Parry an answer to that "effect, he not being aware that, on the boatmen "objecting to take them, I had ordered them to be "sent below again."

"With regard to my saying 'I was afraid of the "Chinese taking the letters if I had brought them "up with me' I most solemnly deny having uttered "anything of the kind: and if I chose to take up a "few letters and newspapers in my portmanteau, "I should be glad to know what business it is of "the party signing himself 'N N;' —— as to "his, N N's personal remarks, if he will sign his "name at length, and not screen himself under ini"tials, I shall know in what manner to notice them."

"I have only further to state that it could have "been of no advantage to me to detain the letters, "and that on my arrival in Canton I lost no time in "engaging a boat to bring them up immediately."

CHILE AND PERU.

A friend has favored us with the following interesting account of affairs in these countries, and adds moreover that his letters from Valparaiso of 3d October, do, for obvious reason reasons not touch on politics. The result of the Chilian expedition to Peru (of which we gave particulars in our paper of 30th December) was not then known, but it was thought that it would not be successful. It was hoped that, after it's return, things would go on quietly, particularly as General Bordonia, now minister of war, and the most influential opponent of General Portales, was considered to be a man of talent and real patriotism, the latter a quality but rarely found in South America. He was minister under Freire, when President.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER DATED VALPARAISO, (July 14th)

"Business both here and at Lima is extremely dull, owing to the difficulties between the two Republics; and here it is subject to great embarrassments resulting from the insecurity which has been attendant upon recent events;—the outlines of which are these.

"On the 3rd of June, late at night, Valparaiso was thrown into a state of great commotion by the arrival of a propio from Quillota announcing a revolt among the troops who were disciplining at that place preparatory to embarking for Peru, and that Don Diego Portalis, ("the Man who governs Chile" as the Peruvians said) who went out the day before to review them, had been, with his suite, taken prisoners. The authorities took the alarm, and on the following morning (Sunday) ordered out the militia and one corps of regulars, (the only ones at their command) and marched over to the Baron on the Quillota road, where they were met by a flag of truce from Col Vidaurre, the rebel commander, bearing the message that Don Diego was his prisoner, and that on the following day he should march for Valparaiso, and if the least resistance was offered to his entrance, Don Diego should be shot. This was accompanied by an endorsement from Don Diego himself, recommending a surrender; but, of course, it was well understood that this was forced from him.

"The troops then returned to Valparaiso, and remained under arms until monday afternoon, when they again marched to the Baron in battle array, where they quietly posted themselves, awaiting the Quillota rebels, who appeared at about 3 o'clock tuesday morning, when the fighting commenced; the big guns of the ships and gun boats doing great execution,—this part of the force defensive having been placed very eligibly, opposite a quebrada (Gully) which the enemy must pass. The firing was continued till dawn, by which time the rebels were completely routed; but it was a dear bought victory for—they left Chile's greatest benefactor on the field of battle most horribly murdered, his mouth and hand shot away, and twenty two bayonet wounds upon his body, a shocking sight assure you!"

"Their defeat was fortunate for the people of Valparaiso, as it is said that Vidaurre promised to his troops four hour's sacking of the city, and I make no doubt of it; the alarm was great, all the money was embarked on board the men of war, and every one prepared to defend himself: 51 prisoners have been taken of the rebels, 28 of whom are condemned to be shot; of these 8, including Vidaurre himself, suffered on the 4th of July in the Plaza de Orego, and the other 20 are recommended to mercy.

"There has since been a partial amalgamation of parties in the administration, which is thought by some to ensure quiet, but there are others who have not much confidence in this state of affairs, but, "quien sabe"—one thing is certain the expedition to Peru is a very unpopular measure among the troops and officers, but the Government are determined upon it and the troops are again collected at Quillota. General Borgonia formerly attached to the party of Freire (an able and popular officer) has been appointed Minister of war."

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR, LIEUT.-GOVERNOR AND HOPPO OF CANTON TO HIS IMPERIAL MAJESTY, RESPECTING THE OPIUM TRADE

The following document, to which, we hear, the Chinese attach much importance, reached us at too late a time, to allow us to offer any remarks on it for the present.

The Governor, Lieut.-Governor and Hoppo forwarded Dec. mber 31st 1836, a memorial to the Emperor, respecting the measures adopted against the receiving ships, the seizure of opium and sycee, and of the boats which supply the ships with provisions, in answer to a former document. They beseech your Majesty graciously to condescend and examine these subjects.

We received in the biganing of November an imperial decree through the Privy Council, in which it was stated that Tang and the others (the Lieut.-Governor and the Hoppo) had sent in a statement saying, that they had given orders to drive the receiving ships away, and adopted measures to seize the opium dealers and smugglers.

The English receiving ships and legal traders with those of other nations, sailed this year, under the pretence of seeking shelter against the winds, into the inner seas. The Hong-merchants were accordingly ordered to enjoin upon the Superintendent of the said nation, to make all the receiving ships, anchored at Lintin and other places, return to their country, and not to permit them as formerly to anchor and loiter about. The Hong-merchants received at the same time orders to report, as soon as the receiving ships had got under weigh and returned home.—Upon examination it is found, that an entire clearance of the the fast boats (smuggling boats) had been made; but the craft engaged in smuggling being still numerous, their nefarious practice, which is equally as bad as that of the opium dealers, could not be permitted to go on; we therefore issued orders to the cruisers under the command of both the civil as well as naval authorities to make careful search and seize them etc.

One of the greatest evils in this province is, that Barbarian vessels anchoring in the inner seas, enter into connexions for smuggling. The governor and the others, after having issued these orders, ought to institute a full examination, whether the said barbarian Superintendent had obeyed their injunctions, and whether those receiving ships have now sailed or whether, he has ordered them to return one and all to their country without the least delay. If they however dare to compromise this matter, and I, the Emperor, afterwards upon enquiry hear of it, or some body brings in an accusation to that effect, I (the Emperor) shall hold only the said Governor and his colleagues responsible. There ought to be severe laws enacted against the smuggling craft, and their seizure be effected within a certain priod, so as to extirpate them root and branches. Having made an occasional seizure, do not stay immediately, that you have annihilated the whole: this only creates suspicion (about your veracity.)

Acquaint (the Emperor addresses the Privy Council) with these orders Tang and Ke and let them transmit the same to Wan. Respect this (Here ends the Imperial order in reply to which the Governor and his colleagues have sent in the following memorial.)

Your ministers read this with the deepest veneration in a kneeling posture looking, up with admiration to the care your Majesty bestows upon a corner of the Sea, in order to remove with the utmost energy the existing evil. Having carefully looked over the charts of the inner and outer seas, we find that the Ladrone islands constitute the boundary. Beyond them is the wide and boundless ocean, the black water of the barbarian's sea, which is not under the control of the central territory. Inside of them is the sea about Lintin, the Nine Islands and other places. This port of the outer sea is under the control of Canton Province, and it washes the shores of the interior districts; Kum-sing-mun is one of those ports which belong to the inner Seas. Since 1830 barbarian ships of the outer seas, under the pretence of seeking shelter against the winds, frequently sailed into Kum-sing-moun, during the fourth and fifth month, and remained at anchor until the ninth. As soon as the North wind had set in, they removed to Lintin and anchored there. Last year in winter, we prohibited this most severely, and also erected a battery at the entrance, whilst we stationed there a naval squadron to prevent most strenuously the entering (of the ships.) No barbarian craft therefore entered, but they anchored at Lintin and other places. Thus there were no receiving ships in the inner sea; but it is likewise a fact, that they existed in the outer ocean. When formerly the receiving ships anchored in the outer ocean, the naval commanders of the cruisers stated, that since their arrival and departure was uncertain, their actual number could not be given. Your ministers after having made investigation about the names and number of the receiving ships which are generally known, and obtained authentic information shall adopt measures and exact laws (against them.) How could we conceal this, and not speak out freely or be anxious to adopt specious language to please the ear? Last year we gave our orders to the cruisers of the navy to ascertain the exact number and whether there were any which remained stationary. They communicated the result of their investigation, having found after due examination, that there were indeed altogether 25 vessels, which had remained for a long time. The greater number were English country ships and moreover of American, French, Dutch, Manila, Leeat of each from 1 to 4 vessels: Some of them came and went; but this aggregate is not exceeded. The number of receiving ships is duly ascertained, and this is a plain matter of fact.

In obedience to the Imperial orders, we issued this year our strict injunctions to the Hong-merchants and the Superintendent Elliot to send these ships back to their country. Subsequently to this the naval Captain reported in September that only one single Dutch ship the Lihteaychin (?) had lifted her anchor and sailed out of the Ladrones; this is also a fact, founded upon inquiry. Since only one vessel had left, your minister could then not report that all the remainder had also hoisted sails and lifted the anchor, and sailing east and west had gone beyond the Ludrones. Whilst investigating the state of things and proving in no way dissimulated, we can not but take these subjects into consideration. These vessels are not those of one year, nor is it opium from one country only. Though it is here in open defiance of the prohibition, yet (the drug) is a valuable article, and these vicious barbarians only banker after gain; they are therefore unwilling to throw their commodities away, and use every possible expedient and means, in hopes of obtaining some temporary respite. This is then the reason why all the receiving ships did not immediately sail away.

Your ministers are under the highest obligations for having obtained the great and unspeakable favour of being entrusted with the command of the sea coast, to do away with treasonable practices. We received previously your Majesty's pleasure enjoining us to issue severe orders to the Hong-merchants for sending (the receiving ships) home. We have now again received a (a proof) of your Majesty's condescension in investigating these matters, and, burning with the deepest anxiety, we fear and tremble. Having already issued severe orders to the Hong-merchants, Howkwa, and the others, to command their instant departure, they reported to us, that the said Superintendent Elliot could not indeed effect this, and were told in answer upon their inquiries by the foreign merchants, that the receiving ships were not their own, and that with their best efforts this was difficult to be done. They make excuses on both sides and again wish for delay.

Your ministers found on examination, that according to law, whenever foreigners proved refractory, the hatches ought to be closed to give a fair warning. As they are so determined in pursuit of gain and can come to no resolution (to send away the ships), there ought to be a temporary stoppage of the trade, in order to cut off their expectations. But so many nations participate in this commerce, and the receiving ships belong only to a few states, due investigation ought therefore be made, in order to distinguish between them, and to prevent good foreigners from suffering by this measure.

We have therefore ordered the Hong-merchants to inquire, how many nations had hitherto commercial intercourse, and how many of them traded honestly and had no receiving ships; how many there had really receiving ships etc. and to send in a distinct and clear statement of these matters for our guidance in adopting measures. We at the same time gave the strictest orders, that they should again enjoin your Majesty's severe commands upon the resident foreign merchants; not permitting them to make excuses in order to obtain delay, and extricate themselves from this business. But if they again prove dilatory and still nourish hopes, the hatches will be immediately closed and a stoppage of the trade ensue. Let then those merchants consider, how by permitting the existence of these receiving ships in open defiance of the laws, they can constantly reap the advantages of the (legal) commerce, and who will be the gainer or loser? Matters must be brought to this, that they no longer persevere in their stupidity without once awakening and thus of their own accord bringing upon themselves repentance (for their misdeeds) etc. (There end the admonitions addressed to the foreigners.)

We find on examination, that every nation gains a livelihood by this trade. All the merchants are in a great bustle when loading their ships; in former times, whilst procuring their home cargoes, they did not easily throw away their goods, and were anxious not to lose the season (for sailing). The rhubarb, teas, porcelain, silks, etc. are necessary articles to those nations. On account of disturbances created by barbarians in 1809 and in 1834, the hatches were closed, and they besought us earnestly again to open them. Let every nation pause and look to what formerly happened in the flowery central Empire. If they are now intimidated by the stoppage of trade, they will either, by allowing the receiving ships to remain and persevering in their conduct, lose their means of subsistence; or if they again are roused and awaken, will send them away in succession. Then matters will go on as quietly as heretofore, and there will be no need of taking other measures against inveterate obstinacy. But if circumstances might call for new expedients, proposals might be sent to the court, and a certain course accordingly adopted in order to warn them.

We have also given our orders to the commanding admiral of the station to enjoin the Captains of the cruisers to adopt means for expelling (the receiving ships). Let their conduct be investigated, inspire them with terror and dread, and do not allow them to be careless and neglectful of their public duty. Yet they ought not to commit plunders and thus give rise to animosities. To effect this a certain period has been assigned.

In our humble opinion, the receiving ships anchored in the outer seas, need a daily supply of the necessaries of life. Worthless vagabonds from the coast of our country are accustomed to embark in boats under the cover of fishermen and take a variety of provisions and other articles on board and go there to sell them. They are called bum boats. These vicious barbarians look to them for supplies and thus are enabled to prolong their stay. If these supplies are cut off we might succeed in getting rid of them.

Your ministers have already without mercy seized upon opium dealers and smugglers of every description, to prevent the exportation of Sycee silver and the importation of opium; and thus made an end of the traffic. We now also gave orders to capture these bum boats, and not permit them to have communication on the high seas in order to cut off the supplies of these vicious men. The said barbarians will then have nothing to hope for, their expectations will be groundless, matters will come to extremes, the circumstances will necessarily be changed, and by means of purifying the fountain, the stream will likewise be arrested. According to the report forwarded by the officers of the Ta-pang and Heang-shan station, four of these bum boats containing some cargo have been taken with 24 vagabonds in them, and been delivered for trial to the city, when they will meet with a most severe judgment. Lew-ez, Lin chin Ahurh-ting, Ah-san, and other scamps who were formerly taken with sycee silver and opium have repeatedly been tried, and their sentence has been forwarded for the imperial approval. According to the report forwarded by the civil and military officers and other official persons, there had been, from the beginning of last spring until the commencement of December about thirty seizures made, they had taken 144 offenders, 8861 Taels in sycee, 3077 Taels in dollars, opium to the amount of 3818 catties. The causes of these criminals were judged, the money given as a reward to the Captors, and the opium was burnt. The haunts of opium dealers have also been discovered, after investigation had been sealed up and orders been given for their apprehension; this is on record. But after your ministers have for one year most strenuously exerted themselves to make seizure, they dare not yet say, that this measure will finally have the desired effect.

Dwelling upon the state of things in the Provincial City, we observe, that the price of sycee silver is now low, one ball of opium which traitorous natives formerly bought from the barbarian ships cost above 40 dollars, and now only from 18 to 18. Since the seizures of smuggled silver have commenced, there is plenty of foreign money now found in the country. When the sycee silver was promiscuously exported from this port, prices fell and things were sold cheap, and the value was reckoned according to dollars. Whilst pursuing for any length of time this course with firmness without relaxing, the most important objects will be to prevent the exportation of sycee and to seize upon those bum boats (which come along side the receiving ships). This will greatly tend to the accumulation of wealth and the doing away of abuses, and prove extremely beneficial. But there are many diabolical, malicious, and deep laid plans, and as they do not succeed, numerous complaints and murmurs have arisen.

There are some who spread rumors saying that your ministers being in search of riches, doubtless appropriate to themselves those goods and intend to bring on ruin. Some say, that the civil as well as the military officers are receiving bribes, liberate (criminals) but if they get no money, they seize them. When they search, they only annoy the merchants. When they have made seizures, they decree, that the goods have been lost. There are also some who express their sorrow on account of these judicial proceedings, and talk very gravely saying: the foreign merchant vessels which come hither, will buy only a few teas and a little silk, and the circulation of capital will thereby in some measure be impeded, and the commerce as well as the merchants will greatly be embarrassed, whilst a part of Canton province will be reduced to wretchedness. They also say, that since worthless vagabonds being now every where seized, many of the boat people, unable to gain a livelihood, will betake themselves to robbery.

All these kinds of remarks are confidently circulated in order to censure us, and raise doubts in your minister's hearts with the intention of confusedly disturbing the control with which we govern our eyes and ears.

Though we are not entirely wedded to our own opinions, we just do as if we heard nothing, whilst we shall on the other hand examine with the greatest impartiality well founded rumors, and abuses which require investigation, just as if we expected to gain thereby thousands. Then we have neither to fear the first nor the last, (the consequences), and shall never affect our swallowing organs so much as by swallowing of food, bring on a disease of total abstinence.

We shall faithfully with our whole heart and mind discharge our duty in managing these affairs, and never be in the least remiss in issuing our orders. Having received such great and abundant favors from your majesty, we can also brave the malice of various slander, and shall not incur the guilt of acting deceitfully.

We humbly hope thus to have represented matters in detail, and that your Majesty will give us something decisive in reply. The measures now under consideration we submit in the accompanying document, in answer to the rescript.

CANTON PRESS,

13th January, 1838.

THE HING-TAE AFFAIRS.

We now lay before our readers the report of the judge and trasurer, as well as the Governor's answer to the last representation of the Hing-tae creditors. From these documents, particularly from the former, it will be seen that the authorities are unwilling to comply with the demands of the creditors, and the two Szes refer to a correspondence with the E. I. Company's supercargoes in 1829, according to which the mutual responsibility of the Hong-merchants was to cease. Such correspondence actually did take place, and the Company made the proposal to induce the Government to allow an additional number of Hongs to be established, the number of the security merchants having at that time, by failures, been reduced to seven. However, any arrangements made between the Chinese and the Company, refer to them only, and ought not to influence the transactions between the chinese and freetraders. In fact the principle that the Hing-tae debts shall be paid by the Co-hong has been repeatedly acknowledged by the local Government, the difference between the latter and the creditors being merely as to the time to be allowed the Co-hong to effect payment in. The judge and treasurer state in their report that on former occasions 12 years were allowed, but this is evidently a misrepresentation, all the debts of insolvent merchants having of late been paid within 6 and 7 years. If the Consoo-fund were set aside for the purpose for which it is collected, viz. that of paying the debts of their body, the Co-hong would be able already at the present moment to pay off a great part of the Hing-tae debt, but we are afraid that it exists merely noninally. A tax under that name is annually collected, and each Hong-merchant debited with it's whole amount, but it is generally understood that it is only in so far paid up in the proportion of business transacted by each Hong during the year, as will go to cover the governmental exactions upon the Hong-merchants. Whatever the sum may be, by which the Consoo tax exceeds these exactions, it exists merely on paper, and the tax itself has been totally diverted from its original use, and been appropriated by the Co hong to satisfy the demands made on them by the Imperial and local governments. Hing-tae's creditors ought to insist on this tax being restored to its original purpose, in which case there can be no difficulty to pay the whole of the debt in 5 or 6 years, without resorting to the imposition of a new duty upon the trade, which we believe is contemplated by the security merchants.

Since the Governor's reply to the last representation has been received, the Hong-merchants have proposed to pay within ten years but this offer has not been accepted by the creditors.

THE JUDGE'S AND TREASURER'S REPORT.

Wong, the judge and Ah, the treasurer, issue their orders for the firm and satisfactory arrangement (regarding the payment of debts).

According to the petition of the hong-merchants, they had, after consulting the foreigners, resolved to discharge the whole of Hing-tae's foreign debts by instalment within the space of 15 years. But as the said foreigners were still dissatisfied, and dunned them with the request of shortening the term of years, they had, on receiving orders to that effect, called a meeting of all the merchants, and now make known in a clear statement the result of their deliberations. Whilst accommodating themselves to the wishes of the foreigners, they agreed and settled to pay within 12 years, as in the case of the firms of Hwuching,* Ta-ching, Fohsing, but the foreigners would only admit of 5 or 6 years, and firmly insisted upon it.

In examining the settlement of debts owed by former bankrupt houses to foreigners, we find that the annual instalments paid were above 200,000 dollars. But matters are now not as formerly; there was then the trade of the company, which yielded great profits, and no other instalments were to be paid. But just now every merchant has his own private debts, and Hing-tae and Fatqua, moreover, owe to government about 400,000 Taels; if, therefore, the term of paying Hing-tae's foreign debts is shortened, one will be cared for and the other neglected. A statement of Kingkua's very heavy debts is now given; and if matters are to be only partially adjusted, whilst, as formerly, additions are made to the said hong's foreign and public debts, and by repeated requests brought forward to make up deficiencies, the affairs will be more involved, and the whole trade ruined.

"Whilst sending in a statement of the terms of years during which foreign debts have been in former years discharged in instalments, we beseech our superiors graciously to sanction this settlement, and to permit that the debts be paid in twelve years; thus the public and the foreign debts may be equally liquidated; and the merchants at the same time will be a little relieved, and recover strength."

We, the Sze officers, on receiving this statement, with a list of dividends paid in former years, found on examination, that the celestial dynasty graciously permitted foreign barbarians to come to Canton and barter; according to the established regulations they are permitted to exchange goods with Hong-merchants only; it is incumbent on foreign merchants, at the end of each trading season, to give in a clear statement to the hoppo whether there are any outstanding debts with the hongs, which is recorded, as evidence. If it should happen that such a hong fails, the payment of the claims falls upon the security merchants. But if no clear statement is forwarded, the payment cannot be urged or answered.

If native merchants, in defiance of the prohibitions, borrow of or lend to foreign traders, and thus enter into clandestine and illegal connexions, they are sentenced, according to the law against forming correspondence with foreigners, and fraudulently borrowing and lending; the money thus advanced will, after due investigation, be confiscated by government.

In 1829 an English chief petitioned for the establishement of trading regulations; in that document he requested that neither a new nor old Hong-merchant should pay the debts of other bankrupt hongs; no matter whether contracted with native or foreign merchants; but that every hong should pay it's own debts; thus the evil of too much trusting the Hong-merchants might be eradicated. The officers examined the subject of this petition, and agreed to it, obtaining the sanction of a former governor in an edict to that effect: which is on record.

The annual account of Hing-tae's debts was not, according to law, clearly states; the claims were not brought forward at an early period; but the said hong was allowed to involve itself during the space of seven years to the amount of upwards of 2,320,000 dollars. We are informed that a certain foreigner, Jardine, is a creditor to the amount of 1,700,000 dollars and upwards. One does not know how that foreigner, in dealing with Yen-Keehang's, younger brother, had so much confidence in him that he could give him such an enormous credit; thus, year after year, he was silent and said nothing about it.

* Pow-qua, Gnew-qua, Man-hop.

If we were to act in conformity to regulations formerly established and agreed upon, no payment ought to be made at present. But now the hong merchants have received orders to pay in instalments, and they do their utmost to manage things accordingly. On examining the arrangements for clearing the accounts, made repeatedly in former years, we find that a term of twelve years was agreed upon and sanctioned to clear the whole amount; thus the period for the payment of the debts owing will not be too long, and a full payment is certain.

The government officers act thus graciously in imitation of the great emperor, who cherishes the utmost tenderness towards foreigners, and considering they come in search of gain, will not permit them to suffer the least loss; it is only on this account that an alteration is made, and compassion shown by making arrangements. If they are endowed with celestial goodness they will instantly be imbued with gratitude; and how can they, to the last, harbour in their breast a heart of wood and stone.

But if they do not accede to receiving payment in twelve years, and still wish to urge a term of five or six years for the clearance, one does not know what interpretation is to be put upon their conduct; the more so as the amount of these foreign debts is enormous; and the annual payment in instalments, sanctioned in former years did not exceed the sum of 900,000 dollars and upwards.

Now the said merchants are unreasonable, and are wedded to their opinions; their minds are therefore grievously perverse. If the Hong-merchants, on this account renew their former settlement, and refuse to make the payment, we presume to ask where would the said foreign merchants urge their demands, and whom would they prosecute for payment? Therefore strenuous efforts ought to be made for adjusting and settling these claims; and measures be taken to manage the matter accordingly.

We issue at the same time our orders to the said Hong-merchants to call a meeting of the foreign merchants, to examine into the preceding circumstances, and to point out to them the orders; let them most distinctly acquaint them with the commands; and again and again enter and guide them, that by a mutual understanding, the term of years may be fixed. Moreover, let them send a report to us, that we may examine and forward the same. Do not disobey.

12th moon, 3rd day, (29th December, 1837.)

His Excellency the Governor's reply to the petition of Hing-tae's creditors, dated 30th Dec. 1837.

"The compassion towards foreigners consists in benevolently making arrangements for paying (the capital) but there is no regulation for discharging the interest.

The celestial Dynasty maintains justice to the utmost, and is certainly never weary of exhibiting favors. According to previous arrangements made by the Hong-merchants, the debts of Hing-tae were to be paid within 15 years. But since this period was somewhat distant, I gave orders for changing the term to 12 years during which those the whole should be cleared. Wait then until the Sze (Treasurer and judge) have been urged to draw up a full statement to the great Emperor, and until His Majesty's pleasure for my guidance be known. There is no necessity for making much ado about this matter.

Orders are hereby issued to the Hong-merchants, to acquaint the said foreign merchants with my commands, that they may observe them. Do not disobey. These are my orders. January 6th 1838.

We have had no arrivals of interest during the week. The Premier has arrived, from Calcutta, but is of an earlier date than the Cowasjee Family, the arrival of which we noticed last week. From the Singapore Free Press of 16th November brought per Premier, we see that some cases of piracy had again occurred in the straits. The Free Press also publishes a translation of the new Java tariff, according to which the duties on most articles of British manufactures are considerably raised, and not only on those but also on manufactures from British possessions to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope which are in future to be 25 per Cent on Invoice amount increased by 30 per Cent. This duty will be almost prohibitory.

In another part will be found a letter from Capt. Hamilton explaining why the letter bag of his ship, the Jane Robertson, did not come to Canton earlier. Under the circumstances of the case the censure of our correspondent N. N. as well as our own was undeserved, though it is to be regretted that when Capt Hamilton left his ship for Canton, he did not leave directions concerning the letter bag with his Chief-officer, who was allowed to be ignorant of it's existence on board; had Capt. H. done this, the unpleasant correspondence would have been avoided.

The three senior Hong-merchants called on the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce on Saturday last, expressing their regret at the practice of Opium smuggling at Whampoa and Canton, and beseeching the Committee to use their influence to put a stop to it, since not only the whole foreign trade, but also themselves personally, might, if this smuggling were discovered, be great sufferers. The answer of the Committee was, that they could not interfere in matters which belonged exclusively to the Chinese Government; if the latter wishes to enforce it's laws it must take it's own measures. the Chamber did not feel itself authorized to interfere.

On Wednesday night last, a seizure of 3 chests of Opium was made by the Chinese authorities on board the boat Swift, anchored in the river in front of the Factories, and they have for the present, we believe, been deposited in the Hoppo's office. It appears that a few days previous to this occurrence the Government had received information (or it had at least then become convenient to act on it) of the smuggling of Opium now carried on at Whampoa and Canton, and the three Hong-merchants, Howqua, Mow-qua and Pwanke-qua were called for to give information on the subject. One of them was, we believe, detained within the city about two days, and they have received orders to proceed to Whampoa to investigate matters there and to gain information as to who the parties engaged in this trade are. They went to Whampoa on Thursday last but we have not yet heard what may have been the result of their proceedings.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.
IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS, may be quoted as before, but the demand is not active. COTTON YARN. There has been a little more enquiry but we have heard of no sales.

WOOLLENS.—have rather declined, indeed all kinds of goods are heavy of sale as the holydays are so near.

METALS.—LEAD, has declined to our quotation, and little spirit of speculation even at that price.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER, is without enquiry at our quotation, BETELNUT, is also very dull of sale at 3½. TIN has declined a little, the importations having been large.

COTTON.—In consequence of the near approach of the Chinese holydays, business in this article has been nearly suspended. We hear of of small sales of Bombay at our quotations. One or two considerable parcels of Bengal were disposed of in the early part of the week at one or two mace advance on present rates, which the arrival of the Premier caused to decline. The stock is small of all descriptions, but purchasers hold back from the expectation of further heavy supplies from Bombay.

OPIUM.—The deliveries in the river, which had become considerable, have been seriously interrupted by the seizure of one of the small passage boats with 3 or 4 chests on board, and a very sharp look out is now kept, we understand, on the ships at Whampoa suspected of having Opium on board. The clearances up to the [illegible] are better than was anticipated, and it is said that one or two Mandarin boats have commenced taking it away. Prices have however declined and we believe sales have been made under our quotation. The deliveries at Lintin to the [illegible] were, Patna [illegible]; Benares [illegible]; Malwa 323; Total 421 Chests.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN RAW SILK.—About 1300 bales are said to have been disposed of, and the fine quality at as high as 460, and some of the holders are asking 475. In the commoner descriptions there is little doing; picked parcels of them have been bought at 400 @ 410. No Taysaam are reported as sold.

TEA.—Twankays have been sold at our quotations, and 16 @ 18 Taels may be considered the rates for contract quality. Very little has been done in Hyson for England. Up to the present day have been shipped for England, Black teas 8,779,333 lbs. Green [illegible] 666; Total 9,300,000 lbs.

VOL. 3d. No. 20. CANTON, SATURDAY, JANUARY, 20TH, 1838. No. 124

ANNALS OF CANTON.

(From the Indo Chinese Gleaner.)

The Chinese Topographical Annalists say, that 2230 years antecedent to the Christian era, the region now called KWANG-TUNG, (Canton) was noticed in ancient records, under the names KAOU-CHE NAM-KAOU; NAM-EE; PAK-YUET; YUET and YUET.

TSIN-CHE, the first universal Chinese monarch, about two centuries before our era, pushed his conquests to the south of the MOOH-LING mountain, that bounds Canton on the north, through which a pass was subsequently cut in the eighth century.

This military conqueror TSIN-CHE-WONG i.e. TSIN, the first emperor, who put PAK, "SHIN-ING, WHITE, or RESPLENDENT," on the top of the character Wong, "a king," in order to make a new title for himself, meaning THE GLORIOUS KING, and which, in the poverty of European phrase, is and which, in the poverty of European phrase, is translated Emperor; and who, to prove his title to the designation Che, "the 1ST,"—the "BEGINNING," burnt all the ancient records he could find, and buried alive the readers of books.—TSIN conqueror called Canton NAM-HAE, "the southern seas," a name which is yet retained for the principal UNE, or district, in the province.

From that period till the SUNG dynasty, about A. D. 1000, Canton underwent six revolutions and was variously designated. TSIN-CHE-WONG'S successor, E-SHE-WONG-TSE, sent up it 15,000 unmarried women; and nearly four hundred years afterwards, it was called KWEI LUM-SHONG KWAN, "the region of cassia, forests, and elephants."

At the time above mentioned, (A. D. 1000) whilst the court resided at Nan-king, or in the provincial dialect Nam-king) Canton, or Ling-sam, (as it was then called) was considered one of the worst places of banishment for refractory statesmen. To go "south of the mountain," as LING-NAM signified, was deemed certain death.

The present name of Canton, viz. Kwon-tung, was not adopted till the UNE-CHEW or Tartar dynasty, founded by the grandson of GENGHIS-KHAN.

Even till the MOOH CHEW, which expelled the Tartars, and was in its turn expelled by those Tartars who now fill the throne of China, Canton was not called a SANG, or province, but a TOW, or LOO, a "way, or road."

And then, first, about A. D. 1297, the metropolis was called by its present name, KWONG-CHOW FOO; previously to that time it was called KWONG-CHOW-LOO.

Under the emperor KOW-TEI, of the HOAN dynasty, a self-made king, who held his court at POON-YU, the modern Whampoa district, called Canton region by a name he thought applicable to himself —NAM-HOW. "The southern warrior."

The emperor KOW-TEI confirmed his title, and the king YAP-KUNG "offered tribute" to his liege lord

Under the same dynasty, a king of MAN-YUET, as FOKIEN was then called, made war upon Canton, and lost his life. By the interference of the emperor, peace was restored; but he soon afterwards sent his own troops to subject NAM-HAE. "The southern barbarians," as the people of Canton were called by him.

A. D. 415. the pirate LOO-SUNE attacked and took possession of Canton, after a hundred days fighting.

In 419. the people of Canton sent, as tribute to MOW-TEI, "The Martial Monarch" a piece of PINE cloth. But the hardy warrior was so displeased at its luxurious softness, that he re ecte it; and issued a mandate, forbidding the people on the south of the mountain ever to make any more such fine cloth.

In 654. KING-CHOW (or the Island of HAINAN) was first occupied by the order of the second emperor of the TONG dynasty.

About 703 SHE-PAK, "trading vessels" began to introduce "rare commodities," extraordinary or curious manufactures.

The ensuing year was remarkable for the governor SUNG-YING, (Che-kaou-mân-tow-nga) "first teaching the people to burn earthen ware."

And in 705, a statesman, called CHEONG-KAW LING, cut the famous pass through the MOOH LING mountain, to facilitate intercourse between Canton and the northern ports of the empire.

It is further remarked, to the credit of this statesman, that when, on the emperor UNE TUNG'S TSIEN-TSOW, "thousand autumns," i. e. his birthday, all the courties were presenting POH-KING, "ornamented mirrors," CHEONG-KAW-LING offered a book, in five valumes, which he had compo ed to shew TSIEN-TOH-HING FEI CHE USE, "the causes of the rise and fall of former dynasties;" and this work he called; TSIEN-TSIW-KUM-KAM, "a golden birthday mirror."

In 795, a TSEET-TOO-SEU, as the generals were then called, who commanded in Canton, wrote to court, stating that the trading vessels had all deserted Canton and repaired to OA-SAM, Cochin-China; and he added, that he wished to send a sort of consul thither.

Some of the ministers were in favor of the measure; but the Imperial will was determined in opposition to it, by the opinion of one who argued to this effect.—"Multitudes of trading vessels have heretofore flocked to Canton; if they have all at once deserted it, and repaired to Cochin-China, it must have either been from extortions being insupportable, or from some failure in affording proper inducements. When a gem spoils in its case, who is to blame but the keeper of it? If the pearl be fled to other regions, how is it to be propelled back again? The SHUKING classic says; Pat kwei e mat, tsik une yun kak.—"Do not prize too much strange commodities, and persons will come from remote parts."

This quotation was made a few years ago by the Canton government; but what the spirit of it is, does not appear quite plain. Commentators say, that PAT-kwei means, "not to prize or value a thing so as to be greedy of getting it by extortion;" and regards as an admonition to the government not to exact too much.

The words, however, as they stand, and the temper of the Chinese generally, rather incline to the idea of affecting INDIFFERENCE; like the buyer who cheapens an article by saying, "It is naught—it is naught!" and afterwards, when he has succeeded in obtaining the commodity below its real value, makes his boast, how he has "DONE" the seller. The Chinese are taught to repress curiosity.

This same year those in power were forbidden, by Imperial authority, to take, by force, the sons and daughters of peaceable subjects, to make slaves of them; which prohibition implies the previous existence of this unjust and cruel slave trade.

In 879. the Cochin-Chinese made war upon Canton by land; and a public spirited man obtained great credit for building large vessels to bring grain from FOKIEN province.

After the fall of the TONG dynasty, (in allusion to which the Chinese of the present day, call themselves TONG-YEN "a man of Tong") there were five short dynasties of from ten to twenty years duration each; in Chinese his ory c lled the ING TOH, "five generations." To the first of these, in 904, Canton sent tribute of gold, silver, rhinoceros' horns, ivory, and other valuable commodities, to the amount of five millions of taels. The principal person concerned, viz. LOWKEW, was, in consequence, created king of Canton, under the title NAM-HOH WONG, "king of the southern sea."

The court of Canton is represented, of this time, as cruel and extravagant in an extreme degree;—criminals were boiled, and roasted, and flayed, and thrown on spikes, and forced to fight with tigers and elephants!

The horrid tale shocked the founder of the most learned Chinese dynasty, viz. that of SUNG. (A. D. 964) and he exclaimed, Ing tong kaw tsze yat fong man, "it is my duty to deliver the people of this region."

A prodigy was seen by the people of Canton, Chung sing kae pak low. "all the stars flowed to the north," and the ensuing year they obtained peace andtranquillity.

At this period Canton appears to have been in a very barbarous state; and, in the estimation of the government, was excessively addicted to sorcery and superstition. Hence (A. D. 980,) government Kum ling nam yam sze. "prohibited the superstitious practices on the south of the mountain," and threw down their YÂM-TSZE, "superstitious temples" YÂM usually denotes "lewd"—whether lewdness formed a part of their rites is not certain.

Another prohibition was NOT to SHAT-YUN-TSEI-KWEI, "kill men to sacrifice to demons."

Thus it appears that not more than 800 years ago human sacrifices were offered in China; and report says that even to the present day the makers of porcelain purchase a child wich they devote to be burnt in a new made furnace.

At the period now referred to, witches and wizards were prohibited; and dispensaries of medicine were established to relieve the sufferers from the noxious damp diseases much spoken of in the history of that period. The Sung dynasty, at its commencement, appears to have studied much the welfare of Canton. It forbade expeditions against Cochin-China, reprobating the idea of useless territory. It caused the city of Canton to be walled in; and when the Cochin-Chinese pillaged the western side of the province, they did not ventu e to lay siege to Canton.

It was subsequently harassed by internal rebellions and by attacks from contending dynasties. In the first Tartar conquest it suffered much; and books dare not yet tell wat it suffered in the conquest made by the reigning family. Tradition says that TWO-THIRDS of the inhabitants perished.

About 1037, FO-TSUNG, "burning funeral rites" were prohibited; i. e. burning the corpse instead of interring it. This is, however, the present practice of the Buddha priests in China.

The same authority also forbade the use of the terms created by the preceding Tartar dynasty, viz. "gods of the west, east, and north seas"—retaining only the "god of the southern sea."

About A. D. 1500, the pirates of Canton joined with the Japanese pirates and committed depredations on the coast; and frequent insurrections are recorded, some of which lasted for ten years at a time, which, together with banditti of robbers, must have greatly distressed the peaceable inhabitants.

It was in these troublesome times, during the reign of KA-TSING, who ascended the throne in 1520, that Europeans first visited China by sea.

My annalist closes by saying, that "during the last years of the MING dynasty, when anarchy generally prevailed, the sufferings of the people were inexpressible; but the temporary blaze of an expiring flame naturally precedes its eternal extinction; and the flame of discord blazed a while, till the rising Tartar family, that now reigns, extinguished it for ever, and introduced a never-ending tranquillity!"

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

A fortnight ago we recopied from the Sandwich Island Gazette a statement of the occurrence of irregular tides there. A later number of that same paper (of 2d December) has since come to hand, and we copy from it the following interesting account of a visit to the volcano, performed on the same day these irregular tides occurred. The sudden cessation of the burning of the crater was probably occasioned by some convulsion of the earth at no great distance, which at the same time produced the phenomenon of the tide already described.

To the Editor of the S. I. Gazette.

Honolulu Nov. 30th, 1837.

Sir,—In consequence of a paragraph in your last week's paper, wherein is state a wish for information to gratify the scientific and curious. I send you the following account of a visit to the great volcano at Hawaii, and of its singular cessation from action: If it is worthy of insertion in your paper it is entirely as your service.

On Saturday the 4th of November, I started from Byron's Bay in company with two gentlemen belonging to the Barque Admiral Cockburn. The travelling was exceedingly fatiguing, in consequence of incessant rain: We halted for the night in the district of OOA; the next morning, (Sunday,) —continued upon our journey, and, at about two o'clock in the afternoon, found ourselves in the vicinity of the wished for sight. A number of steam-holes indicated our near approach to the great crater, which at length, suddenly burst upon our view: We stopped, as it by magic, to look at the terrific hole forming the mouth of the crater, which is estimated at eight miles in circumference,—the least on six miles, and the depth fifty one hundred feet, this was a sight really frightful: We encamped for the night in a rude hut, constructed on the brink of this immense precipice, and, although fatigued, we could not sleep, so much did we enjoy the night view of the burning matter below: Our most sanguine expectations were fully realized in the wonders of the scene;—we could see three burning lakes in beautiful action, as well as innumerable fires issuing from cracks in the lava, and a display of the liquid matter discharged from four small craters: The report from the craters was equal to the sound of cannon and the burning matter ejected from them had the appearance of rockets, when exploding in the air.

One large lake was grand in the extreme; at one period it assumed the resemblance of a ripple or a brook; at another the ignited fluid danced in fantastic wares; —at last it melted into a becalmed sheet of liquid fire. It was terrific! it was awfully sublime!—

On Monday the sixth of November, our party descended the crater, and, in about three quarters of an hour reached the bottom; we walked towards the burning lakes,—but we had not proceeded far when we found some difficulty in breathing, in consequence of the air being strongly impregnated with sulphurious vapor, which issued from the fire beneath us; at every few paces we could see a distance of not more than two feet from the surface; at times it was so hot that we were obliged to make rapid strides to save our feet from burning.

We passed several large chasms, from which heat almost unbearable reached us, still we proceeded, though attended by danger, for we distinctly heard the fire rolling in threatning anxiety beneath us. We reached the brink of the lake;—here we gathered some asbestos; Had our sticks been somewhat longer we might have thrust them with ease into the burning lava; The heat and sulphurious vapor, at this time, were so oppressive that we thought it advisable to make a precipitate retreat.

We now roamed at large, over a field of lava, of at least four miles in extent; our guide refused to proceed any further, stating that he had never been in that direction before. We visited the sulphur banks and collected some fine specimens of pure sulphur.

After being thus gratified, we commenced our route of ascent; the road led across beds of lava, thinly crusted over; here we found our sticks of great service, as the surface gave way under our feet; the crusted lava had the rotten appearance of half thawed ice.

On our way we saw a small crater in fine action; it threw out considerable masses of fire: We gathered some bits of the volcanic matter, as it hardened upon exposure to the atmospheric air.

We now ascended; at about two o'clock in the afternoon we regained our hut; as the weather was fine we were enabled to take a good survey of this astonishing volcano; previously to our starting it suddenly ceased action, and continued quiet until we left it. I remarked, immediately, to my companions, upon the singularity of this appearance, such as it is at once to the effects of an earthquake or a grand eruption.

When we arrived at about eight miles from Byron's Bay, we heard a confused account from some of the natives, that something of the kind had taken place: We hastened on, and, upon reaching the bay, were astonished at the desolate appearance of the place; upon inquiry we learned that the sea had broken in and swept way the houses, and every thing else of a moveable nature to some distance inland; It is much to be regretted that some lives were lost, and great praise is due to Capt. James Lawrence, for the prompt assistance rendered by himself and his crew, with boats, in saving many of the natives who were struggling for their lives.

The causes of the sudden break of the sea, and of the cessation of the action of the volcano at the same time, must long be matters of speculation with the scientific; To them I leave it. Although the members of our party were much fatigued, they still did not regret the journey to the volcano: And it may be justly affirmed that it is one of the most sublime and splendid sights in the world.

SCIENCE—NEW AND BEAUTIFUL INVENTION.

WHEN in London a few days ago, we learned that an eminent scientific gentleman is at present engaged in maturing an invention which promises to lead to the most astonishing results, and to exert a vast influence on the future progress of society. It is an Electric Telegraph, the powers of which as much surpass those of the common instrument bearing that name, as the art of printing surpasses the picture writing of the Mexicans. The Telegraph consists of five wires, inclosed in a sheath of India-rubber, which isolates them from each other, and protects them from the external air. A galvanic trough or pile is place at the one end of the wires, which act upon needles at the other; and when any of the wires is put in communication with the trough, a motion is instantly produced in the needle at the other extremity, which motion ceases the moment the connection between the wires and the trough is suspended. This five wire may thus denote as many letters; and by binary or ternary combinations, the six-and-twenty letters of the alphabet may easily be represented. By a simple mechanical contrivance, the communication between the wires and the trough may be established and stopped as the keys of a pianoforte are touched by the hands of a practised musician, and the indications will be exhibited at the other end of the chain of wires as quickly as they can be read off. In the experiments already made, the chain of wires has been extended to a length of five miles, (by forming numerous coils within a limited surface;) and the two ends being placed near each other, it is found that the transmission of the electric action is, so far as the human senses can discern perfectly instantaneous. Little doubt is entertained that it may be conveyed over a hundred or a thousand miles with the same velocity; and the powers of the instrument promise to be as great as its action is rapid. It will not be confined, like the common telegraph, to the transmission of a few sentences or a short message, and this only in the daytime, in clear weather, and by repeated operations, each consumine a portion of time; for while it works by night or by day, it will convey intelligence with the speed of thought and with such expressness and ease, that a speech slowly spoken in London might be written down in Edinburgh, each sentence appearing on paper within a few minutes after it was uttered four hundred miles off! There may be practical difficulties attending its operation as yet unknown; but we speak here of what intelligent men acquainted with the experiments now in progress, look forward to as their probable result. If the promise these experiments hold out be realized, the discovery will be perhaps the greatest in the annals of the world; and its effects will be such as no effort of imagination can anticipate. A capital like London, with these electric nerves ramifying from it over the whole country, would be truly the sensorium of the empire. Men a thousand miles from each other would be enabled to confer as if they were in the same apartment, or to read each other's thoughts as if they were written in the sky. It would supersede the post, even though carried with railroad speed. Compared with it, the swiftest winds that "waft a sigh from Indus to the Pole," would be lazy messengers. In a despotic country, it would invest the Prince with something like omniscience; and in a free state, spread a thought or an impulse from one extremity to the other in an instant, and give the people a power of simultaneous action which would be irresistible. It is proper to add that the author must not be held answerable for our account of his invention, as we had no communication either with himself or any of his friends. Our informant, however, was a man of science.

SOCIETY GE'NE'RALE DES NAUFRAGES.

It is perhaps not so generally known, as the subject deserves, that early in the year 1835, a society, denominated as above, was established in Paris, with the humane view of affording a sustance at shipwrecks, in whatever part of the globe these occurred, and that this society intends to unite individuals of all nations in this compassionate and humane enterprise. We see, in the prospectus which was handed to us by a member, that the King and Queen of the French, as well as the Duchess of Kent and the Queen of Portugal have become Patrons of this Society, and that among the members are to be found the most illustrious names Europe boasts of at the present day. Many of the British noblemen and distinguished officers have become members, and Admiral Sir Sydney Smith is the Director of the works, whilst General Baron de Saint Denys is President of the Society. We also find in the list of the honorary presidents, Reschid Bey, Ambassador, and Rahoddin Effendi, Charge'd'affaires of the Ottoman Porte, the Turkish High Admiral Tahir Pasha, Sidi Ouabark Benlay, Ambassador of Marocco, &c. &c.

The following is an extract from the prospectus explaining the objects of the Society, the manner in which they propose to reward merit, and the rate of subscription.

THE OBJECT OF THE SOCIETY.

"1. The Society is founded with a view of uniting the benevolent of all countries.

2. It embraces every species of means for the saving of lives in the case of shipwreck or inundations and whatever concerns the commerce, industry, and science of nations.

3. The Society will form establishments in all the principal ports of the kingdom, and extend its operations to other countries according to the number of its Subscribers, and will have a special agent at each of its establishments.

PRIZES AND RECOMPENSES.

4. The Society proposes to award every year prizes in medals of gold, silver, and bronze; and pecuniary recompense to those who aid by their actions, efforts, or writings the advancement, and success of its labours.

PUBLICATIONS.

5. The Society will publish, at least once a month, an account of its actions relative to its operations in t e cases of shipwreck, as also that of commerce, industry, literature, sciences and arts.

6. It will open a correspondence with all similar Societies, with all the learned bodies of the globe, and exchange publications.

7. The Society will furnish gratis its journal and memoirs to all its members.

FORMATION AND ORGANISATION.

8. The Society to be composed of an indefinite number of members of all nations.

9 To become a member of the Society it is necessary to be presented by a member, or to solicit it by a letter addressed to the Secretary General, and to give in an adhesion to the present statutes.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

10. Each member to pay an annual subscription, with the exception of the seamen employed by the Society.

11. The Society having considerable expense to incur, in establishing and constructing its material, will divide its members into four classes.

12. The first "to be called" Class of Protectors to be composed of Sovereigns and members of royal families, ministers of state, and those who pay to the Society 1,000 francs.

13. The second to be called "Class of Benefactors" who pay from 200 to 500 francs.

The names of the Protectors, and Benefactors, will be inscribed on columns of their sections, surmounted by the national flag of each section.

14. The third, to be called "Associates" who pay an annual subscription of 20 francs.

15. The fourth, to be called "Assistant Associates" who pay 6 francs annually, and receive the statement only every six months.

The fifth, to be called "The Seamen" who pay no subscription, but contract, as members of the Society (receiving a Diploma), an obligation to aid by their exertions whenever required, in case of shipwreck, etc. etc."

We have yet to mention that in England Messrs. Rothschild will receive contributions to the Society of not less than £ 8, whilst Major Tonkin, general Agent for the Society, at Exeter, Devonshire, will take charge of all smaller sums.

From the second report published by the Society we learn that several medals have already been awarded to such, seamen and others, as had been active and successful in saving from drowning some of their fellowmen.

We shall be glad if this notice tempts our readers to become members of a Society the objects of which are so very laudable in every respect.

CHINESE PIRATES.

From the earliest times until this very day, piracies were committed on the coast of China more frequent y than even in the waters of the Indian Archipelago. But the descendants of this country are not as sanguinary as the Malays, and therefore fewer people were killed and less ravages committed.

Those who have only read about the theory of this government, very naturally wonder, how such a well regulated administration does not immediately put a stop to these depredations. With all the boasted severity of the laws, and the most bombastic tirade against these miscreants, they continue their evil deeds and put the Imperial forces at defiance. The victories over the buccaneers exist generally on paper only, root and branches are cut off, not with the revenging hand of justice, but with the pencil of the hero who records his own exploits. The most successful mode of doing away with piracies has been a composition with the chiefs. By raising them to honors, and giving them very large rewards, they have been prevailed upon to betray their companions in wickedness and to surrender to a lenient Government.

We shall quote here the opinions of an eminent Chinese writer regarding piracy, he says: "The seas about Shan-tung province are visited by only a few of their craft, whilst all the other parts of the Chinese coast are infested during six months of the year by these buccaneers, yet, though merchantmen fall in with them, the imperial navy seldom encounters these outlaws. At this time of general peace few instances of their depredations occur. The beginnings are very small. Two or three vagabonds take perhaps possession of a fishing smack, and, after having ten in number, they attack merchant vessels. They either plunder the junks or take entire possession of them, and persuade the sailors to swell their lists. If the crews were not immediately terrorstruck by perceiving the freebooters, they might easily escape the pursuit of these petty pirates, but their very sight renders them helpless and unfit to act.

"To remedy in some measure this evil, merchantmen ought to be permitted to carry fire arms in order to meet their antagonists on equal ground. To prevent the evil consequences of allowing armed vessels to cruise in the seas, sufficient security ought to be given by the people on shore for the good behaviour of the adventurers who embark on board the junks.

"As piratical vessels during stress of weather are certain to retire to their haunts and anchor in the most retired creeks and inlets, it is very desirable that government should search for them at such times, when they will become an easy prey. Hitherto the naval officers, when about to cruise against pirates, stuck up flags, let off crackers and guns, and enlivened the evenings with martial music; this is nothing else, but giving the pirates timely warning to hide themselves. The best method would be to embark quietly on board a merchant vessel and pounce upon the unwary pirate. All the booty made ought to distributed amongst the sailors, and those who have signalized themselves must be advanced to the rank of boatswain and their road to promotion be facilitated in every possible way; thus they will become vigilant and strenuous in their endeavours. From Namao westward, the inhabitants of the coast, have often overawed government, and carried on their depredations with impunity. The mandarins are only too happy to avoid the necessity of bringing these marauders before a court of justice and compromising the matter. If such connivance is extended further and further, what will be the end of it? Yet it is easy to sweep the whole coast from this vermin within half a month, if only the proper measures are adopted and conscientiously carried into effect."

This remains however still to be done. The imperial navy is still too fond of displaying the celestial terror of crackers, flags, and the din of the gong, before which the maraunders retire in dismay. Thus there is a bloodless contest constantly carried on, which however never strikes at the root of the evil.

CANTON PRESS,

BRITISH AND CHINESE RELATIONS.

Since the beginning of the free-trade the mode of carrying on the trade with China has changed considerably. Formerly a certain amount of business was annually transacted by the E. I. Company, and the remainder was, including even the American houses, in very few hands, compared to how it is now divided. Moreover the British then resident here were in a manner under the control of the select committee, and the shipping at Whampoa this body had completely under its orders. Competition could therefore hardly be said to exist, the Company ruled, and whenever any dispute arose between the British and the local authorities, these were settled according to the view taken of them by the Company.

But when the trade of China was thrown open to every British subject, on the Company's retiring, things became materially changed. Instead of the few individuals hitherto engaged in this trade, a number who had come to China attracted by the favorable prospects of a free trade began to share in it. The controling power was gone, for though the British Government intended to have set up a kind of government here, an Imperium in Imperio, we all know the disgraceful fate of Lord Napier's mission; the old adage of "parturiunt montes, nascitur ridiculus mus," was again exemplified; the Commission, which was to have had civil, criminal, & admiralty jurisdiction, which was to protect the British trade, and to have smoothed all things with the stubborn local authorities, was, after a blustering and ill directed attempt, obliged to fall back upon Macao, where it lingered for a while, when branch after branch fell or was lopped off, and the whole of the brilliantly got up establishment is now reduced to a kind of Consulate, though under another name, having no influence whatever with the local government, and altogether unable to protect the commerce of Great Britain or benefit it in the slightest degree. Under such circumstances it will not be matter of wonder that in the commercial competition, now divided among many houses, every one thought rather to advance his own interest than that of the community in general, nor was it possible to act in concert where interests are so much divided and frequently opposed to each other. The Chinese continued the trade in the same manner as before; namely by a body of security merchants and these, being able to act in concert, could combine, whenever they liked, to raise or depress prices at will, and to stand between the British and the local authorities whenever the former had to complain of the Co-hong or thought it otherwise desirable to communicate with the Government. That a trade must be carried on with some disadvantage where on the one side, combination can be had recourse to, whilst, on the other hand unregulated competition plays into its hands, admits of no doubt, and the limitation of trade to the Co-hong is one of the several causes of complaint the British justly have against the Chinese. In many ways besides their trade is hampered, whilst, on the other side, smuggling has, ever since the free-trade began, made great progress on the coasts of China and even in it's ports, which the Government has hitherto been unable to check, nor will perhaps ever be able to put a stop to as long as the many restrictive measures which now limit the intercourse between foreigners and the Chinese, both as a nation and a Government, are enforced. It can however not be denied that during the last 18 months the local as well as imperial governments have more frequently than formerly, expressed their jealousy of this smuggling trade, particularly of that in Opium and precious metals; that the smugglers have become bolder than before, and that it is probable that at no distant period active measures will be had recourse to to do away with it.

Many of the Hongs are at the same time in so rotten a state that it becomes a matter of great danger to trust them with property on credit, whilst others have already failed to a very large amount for which no security has been given and very tardy payment only been offered. The application of the creditors to the local government has only produced a lengthy correspondence, vaunting the extreme compassion and benevolence the celestial Empire cherishes for barbarians from afar, and it is very probable that, unless some actual outward interference is had recourse to the creditors will for a long time remain unpaid.

It is not our intention for the present to enter minutely in to all the causes of complaint of the British merchants against the existing state of things; the object of these lines being to serve as an introduction to a few essays on the intercourse of the British with the Chinese. We shall in them endeavour to lay before our readers, the position in which the British stand towards the Chinese Government and nation. The complaints which the former have against the latter, as regards their trade, and the personal restrictions they suffer under; what are the causes of dissatisfaction, uneasiness and jealousy the British give to the Chinese government and to their nation? In what manner are these causes of discontent and complaint to be removed? Will a friendly intercourse between the governments have a salutary effect? and, if so, in what manner is it to be opened, and how maintained?

It must be obvious to every one acquainted with affairs here that there are now many jarring elements at work, which by constant friction must at last ignite, and that we are proinbly on the eve of a crisis by which the footing on which the trade is now carried on will be shaken, and materially altered. In such a case it must be our endeavour to render that change favorable to us, and the better to enable us to do so, a clear statement of how matters actually stand, will we hope, be favorably received, and prove to be of use. It must be remembered that the footing on which we officially stand here, is merely that of sufferance; in fact the Son of Heaven in his transcendant mercy and benevolence is pleased to permit the barbarian nations from afar to seek a livelihood in a corner of the Chinese Empire: but the government at the same time affects to look upon this trade as of utter indifference to them, and has several times threatened to drive away the insolent barbarians who dare to act in opposition to the imperial will. Such threats are however not intended to be acted on, nor, we doubt much, would the local government obey orders from Peking to expel the foreigners, nor perhaps could they if even they had the will. We have of late read in several of the reports from the local authorities that they at least are well aware of the importance of the foreign trade, and that they even dread the consequences of a temporary stoppage of it, for, say they, "hundreds of thousands of labouring men gain their livelyhood by it, and would they not, if the trade were stopped, be exposed to the utmost want and misery?" But not only the labouring classes are interested in the uninterrupted continuance of the trade; there are the numerous merchants and shopkeepers, a class that cannot fail to have some interest with the government officers, if not very great, who all exist by it; and there is besides another class of people whose wealth gives them considerable influence with the government, and whose sources of profit are so closely connected with the flourishing of the foreign trade that they would probably use all their interest to suffer no interruption to take place; we mean the shroffs or bankers, men of large capital belonging partly to them and partly to friends all over the Empire, who find the employment of money to forward the foreign trade to yield a better percentage of interest than they could otherwise obtain. The sum total of the foreign Import and Export-trade of Canton and Lintin amounts annually to the enormous sum of about 80 millions of dollars, more or less, and believing even that the resources of the Chinese Empire are very great, it must be apparent to every one that the employment of such large capital must be the means of maintainance of a great multitude, particularly if it is considered how very frugally the chinese labourer lives, and how small a sum consequently suffices for his support. We know very well that the manufacture of tea requires more hands proportionally, than the raising of almost any other produce. The exports of this article were in 1836 37.

to England,	.....	301.280 Pls. value $	14.809,782
,, America,	.....	124.361 ,, ,,	5.130,826
,, India, New-So. Wales, Holland etc.	.....	say .... ,,	1,000,000
		$	20.033,608

Say that of these 20 millions one half goes to remunerate the merchant, the money lender, pays for freight for the charges of the Hongs and duties, which half it must be remembered also gives the means of subsistance to a great number of people, the remaining half pays for the support of the labouring population, and supposing that $\frac{1}{2}$ $ per month is necessary for their sustenance, men, women and children together, and this is rather a high computation, the number of people who absolutely live by raising teas for foreign consumption will be found to amount to the great number of 560.000, without counting those who subsist on the other half of the value of the tea: with the latter, we dare say, it would be found that, if the exportation of tea ceased, near 800.000 people would be without the means of subsistence! The exportation of silk, raw and wrought, amounted during the last season to $ 10.836.872 -and, assuming the same plan of division, another 400.000 individuals will be found to depend for their livelyhood on it. Thus we see that the two chief articles of export from China, alone maintain in the aggregate at least 1.200.000 individuals. How then, such being the case, can the Chinese government affect to look with indifference upon a trade that nourishes so many of it's overgrown population, and must they not, in case they throw obstacles in the way of it's continuance, fear rebellion and revolution to which, by starvation, their subjects would very likely be driven? Of this, we doubt not, the local authorities at least are well aware, though the Imperial Government may not, be owing to its great distance from the districts chiefly interested in foreign trade. We ought therefore, in future transactions with the Chinese Government never lose sight of the fact, that the cessation of the foreign trade would involve the latter government probably in great difficulties, and that the trade has become so necessary to them that the Chinese cannot now do without it. Threats of stoppage of trade, or of driving away foreigners ought to be allowed very little weight, and in never abandoning this position, the conviction is gained that we have become necessary to them.

We shall, in our next, follow up these introductory remarks as already explained above.

To the letter from "Spectator" regarding the irregular delivery of letters we can not, for several reasons, give insertion. If common report is to be believed, it has been too general a practice to delay the delivery of ships packets to allow of any parties being pointed out in particular. In cases where vessels are sent to one party exclusively, and perhaps on purpose to convey important intelligence, no one, we think, has a right to complain if the packets for others, having no interest in the ship, are not delivered till the object for which the expedition was made has been obtained but where the ship is one of general freight, we see no possible excuse that either the Captain or the Consignees can have for detaining a moment longer then necessary any letters she may bring, and any delay, either accidental or intentional, subjects the Captains, in countries where laws can be enforced, to a heavy fine. Here, where there are no Port or Post-regulations, we must trust to the sense of justice, and to a wish "to do as they would be done by" of the parties into whose possession letter-bags fall. There is, we are sorry to say, no other power to regulate their conduct.

The letter from "Blue Jacket" brings forward nothing new on the subject it treats, nor can any anonymous communications in this matter be published.

Owing to the Opium trade lately carried on at Whampoa, Hong-merchants have become extremely reluctant to "secure" ships, as, in case any opium being found to have been on board, they would become liable to very heavy fines, and even severe personal restraint or punishment. The vessels now there lately arrived, cannot discharge their cargoes for the same reasons, no chop or lighter boats having been allowed to be sent down to them during the week. The Chinese new-year being close at hand and but little business doing on that account, this impediment is not so seriously felt as otherwise it would be, but still it is sufficiently vexatious.

Chinese justice. We mentioned last week that the local authorities had seen fit to take notice of the Opium trade being carried on at Whampoa, and that some of the Hong-merchants had been despatched to report on the doings at that port. We are not aware of the nature of the information the local government may have derived through them, but a breach of the laws of the celestial empire having been committed, punishment had to be inflicted. The real offenders not being cometable, we presume, the poor pilot who brought the ship up to Whampoa, though of course perfectly unconscious of the nature of her cargo, has been seized for a scape goat, and now undergoes the punishment of the cangue or wooden collar at the door of Howqua's hong. Two of the Hong-merchants are still detained in the City, also for this same affair, and we hear that as much as $ 5000 are asked from one of them for his release, to obtain which he is very anxious, being on the eve of marriage. Hymen's torch will for the present however remain unlighted, the cost to effect it being thought too great.

Another representation from the Hing-tae creditors to the governor is, we learn, about to be prepared. We are afraid that this, already very lengthy correspondence will lead to no result, the Chinese being very clever at evasions. A representation to the British Government has been some time, we hear, under consideration by the committee of the Chamber of Commerce. It is much to be wished that this be speedily drawn up and sent to Her Majesty's government, as it is probable that from that quarter alone can the creditors hope for efficient assistance in the payment of their claims.

Misery in China. No literature in the world teems with so many maxims of morality as that of China; it strives to inculcate charity and benevolence, but we are afraid that it has but little influence on the practice of the people. It is not an uncommon sight, walking through the suburbs of Canton, to see wretches in the most abject state of poverty, lying huddled together on the cold pavement, where they are left to die, unpitied and unrelieved by the thousands that pass by them. Some few days ago six of these miserable objects, more dead than alive were seen in a square lying together with three others already become corpses, and one of the poor wretches was seen to deposit the dead of their scanty covering to shelter her from the cold. Yet, though thousands of their countrymen beheld their misery, not an arm was stretched forth to give relief, not a morsel of food was given them to prolong their miserable existence! Such sights are, we are sorry to say anything but uncommon in the crowded streets of Canton.

The place for execution of criminals is a small bamboo hut resting on the city wall with a thatched roof overhanging it. Hither the criminals are conducted and beheaded, after which their bodies are left to be carried away and buried by their friends. The other day not less than six heads were seen there, one of them but recently several from the body, the crime of whose owner we have heard to have been the following. When, some three or four years ago, rice was scarce and dear, the government possessed itself of the stores of rice-merchants and sold the grain to the people at a fixed price, to prevent their becoming the prey to the greediness of the rice-dealers. The man lately beheaded was one of those employed by government to sell the rice, but was guilty of extorting higher than the established price. His malpractices were detected, and to evade punishment, he hid himself. Whilst in concealment he managed to capture children belonging to rich parents, and extort money from the latter for their release, practising all kinds of cruelty upon his victims to render the parents more eager to pay largely for the liberty of their offspring. It was, we are told, his practice to inflict painful flesh-wounds, and to force his captives to write to their friends giving an account of their sufferings, and praying them not to be sparing to effect their delivery. This man, after having carried on this monstrous trade for some time and eluded all search, was at last taken and has met the punishment he so well deserved.

The following letter we received late last night, and have made room for it, as parts of it may deserve attention. The letter from another correspondent "R" on the same subject is declined.

To Messrs. "Q" and "No Favour" of the "Canton Register"

My dear Fellows,

If you go on in the manner you have lately been doing, anent the affairs of the "Anna Robertson's" packet having been detained too long at Lintin, I shall be under the absolute necessity of cutting your acquaintance for ever,—the loss to you will be irreparable.

Although there is "no law in China," still we carry with us, from our glorious little isle in the west, a noble portion of that free and equitable spirit which characterises our criminal code, and hold every man innocent of the offences laid to his charge until by a patient investigation of the case, he is legally proved guilty. You have, however, in your present indignation, forgotten this, and treat Capt. Hamilton with a dash of that sort of ancient law, known in the "north Countrie" under the name of "Jeddart Justice"—an expeditious mode of clearing the Calendar of vore, by hanging the criminal first, and trying him afterwards at any convenient opportunity. Why will ye still persist in being dissatisfied with Capt. Hamilton's explanation of the matter attested, as it is, by Mr. Donett? One thing appears evident, namely, Capt. Hamilton would have brought the packets with him, had there been room in the fast boat for them, a thing which there was not. Each passenger in her (and the number was five) paid his individual share of the boat hire, and, of course, took care to bring with him what portion of his baggage he conveniently could. And who can reasonably blame them? The boat was hunbered enough; and had you been one of the party Mr "Q" think ye, that I would have looked on ye with a less kindly eye than I now do, had I seen ye preferring your portmanteau to a letter box, and holding your bag of garments in higher estimation than a bag of letters?

Why do not the merchants of Canton invest Capt. Parry or any one else at Lintin, with power to receive letters, and transmit them to this place? Until some measure of this kind is adopted, or Captains of Ships, bringing packets, are guaranteed the boat hire for bringing them up to town, complaints of irregular delivery of letters will be loud, long, and endless.

Fie upon ye then, for this your display of liberality, which I call liberalism. Believe every man to be as honest as yourselves, the circumstances seem against him, until he is proven a rogue, and then, and not till then, deal with him as ye list.

If ye fellow not this advice, truly I shall, tho' with much sorrowfulness of heart, first "bonnet ye" Mr. "Q." then cut your acquaintance, and henceforth leave ye to the imaginations of your own heart. As for you, Mr. "No Favour", I am ashamed to think that you should be so violent in this same cause; If ye do not "cock your bonnet" on the other side, I shall be obliged to unbit ye, and then recognize ye not, for ever.

I remain, My dear Fellows,
In expectation of your amendment.
Yours ever sincerely.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

The holydays commencing next week, have caused the suspension of nearly all regular transactions, and sellers would at present have to submit to great sacrifices.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—There have been a few sales of LONGCLOTHS, prices as before.

COTTON YARN.—without demand.

WOOLLENS.—No transactions, but they have rather declined. LONGELLS assorted would hardly command our quotation; scarlet maintain their advance.

METALS.—IRON has declined fully ¼ of a dollar. LEAD, is a little more enquired for, and has consequently improved a little.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—Without transactions, or alteration in price or demand.

COTTON.—The only sale reported is of Madras Cotton. Tinnevelly at 10.5 @ 10.6, for the Western and Nellore not more than 7.5 @ 8 is offered, the latter being very leafy. In Bengals there has been a little decline; Bombays remain much the same.

OPIUM.—The trade in the river continuing interrupted, the deliveries outside are a little more brisk; but still very limited, and without any improvement in price, except a slight advance at Macao, where some little demand was experienced for Patna, in the early part of the week The deliveries to the 15th were, Patna, old, 21 new, 182; Benares, old—; new, 40; Malwa, 380; Total 604 Chests.

EXPORTS.

NANKIN RAW SILK.—Nearly 2000 bales have been sold, and the demand does not now appear so great, although for the few fine chops remaining, the holders are asking still higher rates; in Cargo silk we do not hear of any purchases, nor of Taysaams.

TEA.—The market is bare of all finer descriptions of black teas, and our quotations consequently refer to the inferior chops.

5. To disturb insects in their holes, and to frighten away birds perching on the boughs. ....3.

6. To despise those persons who compassionately set at liberty, brutes that were intended for the shambles. 3

7. To stop up the dens of wild beasts, and destroy the nests of birds. .....20.

8. Without great reason to kill and dress animals for food. .....20.

9. Secretly to butcher oxen and dogs. ....100.

10. To be the foremost to encourage the slaughter of animals, or to hinder persons from setting them at liberty. .....100.

ORIGIN OF THE TA-THING DYNASTY.

now on the throne of China.

The Ta-ts'hing family carry their traditional genealogy several generations farther back than what is here inserted. They say, The first supernatural intimation of the subsequent glory of the family, was given at Chang-pih-shan. 'The Long White Mountain,' which was upwards of 250 le, or 60 miles high. On the top of it, was a lake, 80 le in circumference, from which sprung three rivers. It was there declared by a supernatural voice, 'This land will produce a Holy Man who shall unite in one all nations.'

At the foot of the mountain was a pool of water, at which, tradition says, three Celestial females came to bathe. After bathing, a divine bird, (A divine magpie) holding in its bill a certain fruit, flew and placed it in the garments of one of the females named Ke. She swallowed it, and immediately brought forth a son, who could speak as soon as he was born, and whose person and figure were extraordinary. To him it was said, 'Heaven has born you to tranquillize disordered nations.' The name given him was Gae-sin-keo lo. After his mother disappeared. and the boy having placed himself in a bark, floated down the stream of a river to a certain shore, where having ascended the beach, he broke off willows and framed a seat on which he sat down, in the wilderness. There were in that land, contending Chieftains, who fought and killed many. One who wenth forth to draw water, saw the boy, and was astonished at his extraordinary appearance. Having returned, and told the people of the Clan, they came out and questioned him respecting his name and surname. He said, 'I was born of the Celestial Female Foo-koo-lun, and am ordained by Heaven to settle your disordered state.' All astonished said, 'Heaven has brought forth a Holy One, and forthwith co natituted him their Sovereign. They fixed their abode at the city Go-ro-ze, in the wilderness of Go-han-hwuy, on the east of the Long White Mountain. They denominated their country Man-chow.

It happened after this, that the people of the state rebelled and killed all the family except one boy, whose name was Fan-chă-kin, who ran into the wilderness, and escaped from a rook or magpie alighting on his head, and which, being seen by his pursuers at a distance, was mistaken for a rotten trunk of and old tree. From this, the family was preserved from becoming extinct. * The next person of eminence, who is now termed the Sixth Ancestor, † having revenged the murder of this family, and fixed himself in their former place of abode, he inherited the name of Cae-sin-keō-lo; and his decendants still retain the two last syllabes of the name, and wear a redgirdle to distinguish them.

* From the preservation of Fan-cha-kin, the Tartars venerate the magpie, and prohibit its being shot. They have an annual ceremony at the spot where this deliverance took place in commemoration of it.

† The 6th Ancestor is denominated in the Mesonhaou, Shaou-tsoo; the 5th, Hing-tsoo; the 4th, Kingtsoo; the 3th, Heen-tsoo; the 2d, Tae-tsoo; and the 1st, or Shun-che, She-tsoo. Tae-tsoo waged his first war about A. D. 1609, with 100 soldiers, and 30 suits of armour.

SKETCHES OF NEW ZEALAND.

(From the Sydney Herald, 17th July, 1837.)

TAURANGA.—The harbour of Tauranga on the east coast of new Zealand is situated in about lat. 30. 40. south, and long 176. 10' east, and may be discovered a long distance off from the appearance of the easternmost entrance, which looks like an island until quite close to the land. It is a very singular high hill, flat at the top, as if it had been cut off; it rises abruptly from the water's edge, and commands a most beautiful prospect of the surrounding country; the many small rivers which are in this harbour are distinctly traced in all their windings, and the channel, both inside and out, is perfectly visible to the naked eye from its summit. Its base may be about two miles in circumference, and is joined by a continuation of low sand hills on its easternmost side for fifteen miles. The westernmost side of the entrance to this harbour is all low land for a long way; it is a bar harbour, from a bar of bank which runs from the westernmost part in the direction of a small island to the eastard of its entrance. There is a small island called Kariwa (on which are plenty of guanas and mutton birds) to the west-north-west, between which and the main land it would not be advisable for a vessel to go, as the water shoals suddenly and breaks heavily in bad weather. The harbour can, however, be approached from the southward without crossing the bar, which has three and a half fathom water on it at low water; the rise and fall of the tide may be about six and a half to eight feet, and on the south west point of the large hill (which is called Waikorire) is a reef which runs off some little way: it is perfectly dry at low water, with six fathom water perpendicular alongside of it; the tide of ebb runs round it like a sluice, and makes it dangerous for a vessel with a light wind to enter on the ebb tide; but on the tide of flood there is no danger whatever. The channel is about three hundred feet wide, the deep water lies all on the northern shore to the eastward when you are inside; the tail of then near the channel has about eight feet of water; the anchorage will probably contain about a dozen vessels, in five to seven fathom water, with good holding ground, and land-locked with room to swing clear of each other.

This harbour is inhabited by two strong tribes of natives, the Nati hae and Nati-rangi, who generally combine for mutual defence, although they formerly used to war with each other. In 1831, they could muster thirteen hundred fighting men, and have generally been remarkable for the uniform kind treatment which Europeans have met with at their hands; they are, of course, like all New Zealanders, covetous of what they see, and will not stick at thieving what they cannot purchase, if they see the chance of doing so without being found out. The Nati hae, or those who live at the south east end of the harbour, at a village called Maunga Tapu, are by far the best tribe; and, although the weakest in numbers, are the bravest and strongest mob of the two. The other tribe live about west by south from the entrance, at a village called Tuuriti, midway between the two villages, at a beautiful spot called Tepapa, or the Flat, which commands a view of the entrance of the harbour. The Church Missionary Society, in the year 1835, formed a branch establishment, and I believe are perfectly satisfied with the disposition evinced twards them by the natives; but, at the same time, it must not be overlooked that there had been Europeans living among those tribes constantly for the previous seven yars; and as those Europeans were neither runaway sailors nor convicts, but respectable parties trading with them for flax and provisions, they must have tended greatly to have imbued notions of the comforts of civilization to them, and have taken off all fears as to personal safety, which is generally entertained on forming new establishments. These tribes have been greatly reduced in numbers since 1831, having been engaged in several wars with other tribes. In 1832 and part of 1833, they contended with the Ngapuhi, (Bay of Islands) Nati-Murry (Frances tribes) and Natti Wakan, (an inland tribe) and were successful in repelling them with the loss of not more than seventy of their men. In 1834, a small portion of perhaps fify men, left Taurangra, and joined another tribe, the Hare were, at Ototeki, near Cape Runaway, and at the end of 1835, or beginning of 1836, they were again engaged in war with the Nati Wakan, part of their old enemies, and Taupo tribes; in this last war they were assited by Tewaharoa, a great Waikato chief. with part of his mob, but wait with treachery and low spirits from having lost some of their principal men, they are now greatly thined, and may be said to have come off but second best, although still in possesion of their harbour and their principal villages.

There are several small rivers in this harbour, most of which end in rapids. Were it not for the extensive flats that are in it, it would perhaps be one of the safest harbours in the world. being not less than one hundred and fifty miles in circumference, including the windings of the different bays, and cutting off the numerous rivers at their mouths. Inconceivable quantities of fish are at all times of the year to be obtained; muscles, cockles, and perriwinkles abound; and it is astonishing the quantities which are daily consumed by the natives without any apparent deficiency; they appear to be replenished by every new tide; some of the muscles are four to six inches long. Wild ducks and teal are only good for eating in the month of April. The harbour has another entrance or outlet to it, about twelve or fifteen miles further to the north-west, but it is very rocky, and there are no natives of many miles near the heads. There are a great many spots in this harbour that have had villages upon them in former times; these places are very conspicuous, having generally the remains of old trenches round them which is their usual method of resi dence: they are also mostly over-grown with wild berries, while the Kaaraka trees with their red fruit shine pre-eminent as an ever-green, and always makes these ruined scenes of former days look respectable. The Tutu shrub, with its berry like our elder, is frequently to be met with at these places. Most of these "deserted villages" belonged to tribes now no more in existence, having been driven by the present inhabitants from village to village until they were quite exterminated. On enquiring what had become of the old tribes, the general reply is Kua pau, with the significant action of putting their finger in their mouth, as much as to say "we have eaten them." This place as well as most others in New Zealand, has a beautiful appearance about the month of December, when the Race or Fortikawa tree is in blosom. This tree has a very magnificent appearance, growing to a great height, but very crooked; it is a beautiful ever-green, has a leaf something like the laurel, and bears a splendid crimson flower with bright yellowish dust in its centre, which adds much to the beauty of the landscape. The Rata only grows in the vicinity of salt water, and is no where to met with at the distance of half-a-mile from it. This harbour is also the farthest place on the east coast, where the Kauri, or New Zealand pine, has hitherto been found. Among the forest trees is one that bears a small black berry with a red spot at top, from which natives extract an oil in a very ingenious manner—The berry is first crushed, and then packed in an oblong basket made for the purpose, with a layer at each end; they are then put into a native oven, and when sufficiently done a stick is placed through each loop, one of which is held down by the foot, under which a hole is dug and a calabash placed to receive the oil, and the other stick is then turned round with the hands, which thus acts as a lever, and the oil of course runs into the vessel below. There is another berry called Kotutu, which is rather plentiful, and makes a pleasant tart; it would however, be greatly improved with the assistance of a little quince. Another small berry of the size of a black currant is numerous about the sand hills, and has not an unpleasant taste, although rather too mellow. The only reptiles here, or indeed any where in New Zealand, are the gnanaandkarati; there is a venomous kind of spider, perfectly black, called a Kotipo, which gives a very smart sting, and which the natives describe as taking a long time to heal. It is generally found among the sand hills, near the sea shore. Rats are plentiful and principally destroy potatoes, kumeria, and corn, but very seldom attack soap, sugar, cheese, leather, &c. like our English rat. The natives are very fond of their dogs, which are very similar to the native dog of New Holland, having sharp pointed noses and bushy tails; they cannot bark, but howl, and when an English dog is set at them they invariably run; it is impossible to walk through any of their villages without having ten or a dozen snapping at your heels, which may be reckoned one of the greatest nuisances in New Zealand.

M.

BURMAH.

From the Singapore Free Press 14th December.

By the late arrivals from Calcuta, we have once again obtained an insight into the affairs of the world, after nearly two months entire abstinence from that craving of Englishmen—news. We perceive that during this period, the Bengal papers have been not a little confident in predicting an early war with the Burmese; quite as much, if not more so, than we have even been. Her Majesty's Ship Pelorus arrived here on the 29th ultimo, bringing, it is understood, despatches to our Commissioner, having touched at Rangoon and communicated with the Resident, Lieut. Colonel Burney. The nature of these despatches does not seem to have been divulged, but we conclude, that they breathe a pacific spirit from the absence of every thing like the stir and bustle of preparation for hostilities. Until the nature of these despatches be known, it is useless to speculate on the probable termination of the existing differences with the Court of Ava. Our opinion is, judging from all we have heard, and from our acquaintance with the character of the Burmese, that there are good and sufficient grounds for War. We have once stated our opinion on this subject at full length and we feel no inclination to go over the old ground again. We perform but a very tiny part in the fourth estate of India, and politics are not much suited to our pages.

We are not at all aware whether it is the intention of Government to insist on their right of having a permanent Resident at the Court of Ava. This is, of course, the main point, as it involves the recognition of the treaty of Yandaboo, and if this is to be abandoned, we suppose we may pack up our traps as soon as we like, and bid adieu to Maulmain, leaving her to the tender mercies of the Burmese; but may be said to have come off but second best, although still in possesion of their harbour and their principal villages.

There are several small rivers in this harbour, most of which end in rapids. Were it not for the extensive flats that are in it, it would perhaps be one of the safest harbours in the world. being not less than one hundred and fifty miles in circumference, including the windings of the different bays, and cutting off the numerous rivers at their mouths. THE COURT OF THE YOUNG QUEEN.

A MORE interesting spectacle than that of the young Queen, surrounded by the flower of the nobility, and exercising the sovereign functions with a surpassing grace and animation that give the most hopeful promise of a glorious future, cannot be imagined. Her youth is in itself a charm that touches every heart; her confidence in the good-will of the people would alone secure their affections even if she had not already evinced an intellect that wants only maturity to confirm the allegiance which her gracious bearing has won beforehand; and the sweet simplicity and cordial zest with which she has dedicated herself to the discharge of those onerous forms and oppressive duties that have been so suddenly and at so early an age imposed upon her, act like a spell upon the national mind, banishing from her presence the feuds of party, and uniting the whole body of her subjects in a common sentiment of devotion to the throne.

Never was that throne so suspiciously filled. At a moment when political factions and dangerous cabals were striking a shape of terror that was rapidly undermining the peace of the country, the princess, in the brightness of trusting youth, rose, like a radiant star upon the storm, and, by her serene influence, lulled it into peace. The steady lustre penetrates the remotest recesses of the land, and faction vanishes, like a dark cloud, in its rays. The best evidence of the universal homage that is paid to her Majesty—an homage which we are willing to believe is guided by worthier motives than the mere profession of loyalty—is to be found in the fact that all parties claim the Queen as their own. But she belongs to none of them in an exclusive spirit —like the air, or the light, her love for her people, fruitful of blessings, is diffused among them all.

The image that may be formed at a distance of this Sovereign—who realizes on the throne the dream of poetical romance, when it combines the most refined qualities in a figure full of beauty and of power—fades before the palpable truth. Her Majesty must be seen in the midst of her court—a court where virtue is not abashed by doubtful associations—to be truly appreciated.

We do not hazard any extravagance of description when we say that of the vast numbers who were presented on Wednesday and Thursday last at St. James's, there was not one who did not retire from the presence deeply impressed with the gentle condescension and intellectual graces of the Sovereign. Many years have passed away since a scene so striking, and, in the highest degree, magnificent took place in the royal chambers of that ancient palace. The assembly was more numerous than upon any occasion for perhaps half a century—the variety of costumes, that gave such an extraordinary vivacity to the tableau, including clerical, legal, and civic functionaries, military and naval officers, civilians and members of all the learned professions, foreigners of distinction from all the courts of Europe, from America and the East, and from the remotest dependencies of the British crown, the most illustrious persons of the realm, and the elite of the nobility—and the universal enthusiasm that inspired the whole with a feeling of joyousness that awakened even more thrilling emotions than the unwonted gorgeousness that was almost blinding in its excess—created an effect that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Every incident in the succession of the ceremonies was memorable. There stood the young Queen giving confidence to the timid by the sweetness of her manner, which surprised every body into admiration, and repressed the involuntary awe which Majesty, under all circumstances, produces. Royal pomp lost its severity in the gentle dignity and natural beauty of her motion; and when she extended her hand to each individual who approached, her eyes, lighted up by a smile of the most gracious encouragement seemed to go along with it. Immediately behind her Majesty on one side rose the voluptuous figure of the Duchess of SUTHERLAND, and on the other stood the Duchess of KENT, whose look of maternal pride shed a domestic interest on the scene that was more touching than its grandeur. Many heads, remarkable for a tone of habitual power, crowded in the background, and in the distance appeared the commanding features of the Duke of Wellington, in consequence of recent indisposition, wore a close black silk cap that enhanced the pictorial attributes of the whole. Her Majesty's ministers, in their robes of state, filled up the extremities of the fore ground; and the general effect of the grouping immediately round the person of the Sovereign, the tumultuous splendour of which was subdued and softened by the sombre tone which the mourning dresses cast upon it, was exceedingly picturesque and impressive.

The occasional awkwardnesses that sprang from the embarrassments of persons who were not accustomed to the forms of the court, carried off the absorbing reflections into which the mind of the spectator might otherwise have been betrayed, and assisted in keeping the attention constantly on the alert. Some, flurried and confused, passed on after their obeisance, omitting to kiss the hand of the Queen when they were reminded of their unconscious neglect, and hastened back, amidst the good-natured smiles of the throng, to make their grateful reparation. Others snatched hastily at the extended hand, and in the impatience and excess of their delight, hardly knew how to avail themselves of the gentle favour with becoming moderation. And that fair, small hand; what toils it underwent in bestowing so much happiness upon the clamouring multitude of the noble-born who pressed forward to place their lips reverentially upon it! The fatigue which her Majesty bore with unexampled patience must have been almost too great for a frame so delicate and so untried in these laborious forms. These were not less than two thousand persons presented on Wednesday, and to each of them, in regular succession, her Majesty performed the same act of recognition and condescension. The mere passive weariness of the position, and the repeated inclinations of her head and arm were sufficient to exhaust her strength. Yet she seemed to endure it to the last with untiring kindness, and to look with flattering pleasure upon the departing crowd, as if she thought that she had not done enough to satisfy her own feelings towards her devoted people.

Well may that people cry, from the depths of their hearts, "God bless Queen VICTORIA!"

BRITISH AND CHINESE RELATIONS.

We have in our last introductory remarks on this subject endeavored to shew that, whatever may be the indifference the Chinese Government affect as to the importance of the trade now carried on through the port of Canton, this trade nevertheless, to produce merely the two most important exports, namely Tea and Silk, supports upwards of a million of the laboring population, remote it is true from the seat of commerce and the local Government, but one which nevertheless would make it's distress heard to their rulers, and render their discontent formidable. Besides in a large community like the subjects of the Chinese Empire, the sufferings of one of their classes would react upon others, just as in countries which we deem more civilized, and probably justly so, comparing the upper classes of these to those that would, through respective wealth or power, be considered as similar in station in the Chinese Empire. It is therefore more than probable that the suffering field laborers and those immediately employed by commerce would enlist in their behalf the landowner, the artisan, and even frequently the officers of the government itself, who their, modes of income being generally of very precarious nature, can subsist only whilst every thing continues in a state of quiet prosperity. The feelings therefore of the whole population of these provinces now interested in the foreign trade, would be in favor of its preservation nor would they probably quietly submit to its being interrupted. In England, it is true, it is held as a maxim, that though the sovereign cannot be made responsible for any of his acts, yet such responsibility falls on the ministers, who may be impeached, but seldom are. In China the theoretical part of the Government is diametrically opposite: there every act of the Government is considered as emanating from the son of Heaven alone, and whatever they are, they must be carried into effect by his ministers or servants, the Emperor being the ostensible cause of such acts, and, one should think, ought to be, as the originator, responsible for the results. However this may sound in theory, in practice the thing is widely different, and the ministers and agents of the Government of th Celestial Empire are, in point of fact, much more responsible than any Minister of the present day in France or England. The Government of China seems to be one of expedients; the Ruling Government, weak and irresolute, are but too glad to shift on their high officers, the Governors of provinces, the responsibility of measures of which the inciatiua, as the Spaniards say, has been supplied at Peking. Thus these high officers are placed between two fires; if they evade to act as recommended them by their masters, and every thing goes on quietly through their acting on their own responsibility, they incur their blame or jealousy; if, on the other hand, they follow out the line of conduct recommended to them, and riot, bloodshed, or even revolution should follow, the blame of this again falls on the Governors, and instances have not unfrequently occurred where, to appease the public resentment, officers have been degraded from their rank and otherwise punished; and not only this,—high government officers have at times been massacred by the multitude for conduct which their duty to the court possibly rendered necessary, and their dastardly masters, to hush up affairs, not only did not punish the rioters or murderers, but trumped up some charges against the dead to whom they imputed the punishment that had overtaken them as justly their due.

Being on this subject, we are led into a digression longer than by some may be thought relevant, but which is necessary, in order to understand, as far at least as our limited means to know aught about the Chinese Empire allow, to lay before our readers an account of the means through which high officials hold their posts, as elucidating what, from the position they find themselves in, will probably be the springs of their actions. It is generally supposed that the offices of Governor and Hoppo of Canton, which usually are conferred for the space of three years only, are obtained at Peking only on payment of a very large sum of money, and that moreover, at the expiration of the term of such government, it is expected that very handsome presents be made to those in power, to screen the Ex-Governors and Hoppos from prosecution for extortion or other malversation in their affairs. Such offices therefore become something like a commercial speculation. Power and influence are not the only objects of the occupants—they must be reimbursed for their actual outlay, and not only for that, they must provide for what in anglo-chinese is called squeezes, after they shall be divested of office. Money-making therefore necessarily becomes their great and engrossing object; and, to obtain this, every office under them is again let out on terms similar to what they hold their own on, and thus every government employé or mandarin considers his place as much his own as an underwriter does his share in an Insurance Company, trying to make the best of the risks whilst he holds it, or as a speculator in mines who having paid up every succeeding call on his share, thinks himself entitled to his quota of the bonanza, which latter is however much less certain to recompense him than the squeeze of the mandarin are, to repay him for his original outlay. This venality of government among the Chinese extends even to the very lowest offices, and the police officer, stationed in the square before the factories, has purchased his rank as well as the highest officer in the Empire. Nor is the possession of an office under government always confined to the individual who discharges its duties; a number frequently club together to produce the purchase money and share in the profits of the office according to their respective interests in the co-partnership. The salary attached to places under government is not the temptation; this is exceedingly small, insufficient frequently even to procure the necessaries of life; it is the peculation such situations give their occupants an opportunity of which give them their pecuniary value.

If therefore, on the one side, the fear of consequences restrains the activity of the officers of the Chinese Government, they are, on the other, swayed by pecuniary interest, to keep things in statu-quo, and both these considerations, there can be no doubt, would go a very great way towards restraining the local authorities from throwing any obstacles in the way of foreign trade, such at it is now conducted, and which now, at least in Canton and it's immediate neighbourhood, furnishes them with the means of obtaining and maintaining their situations. The very same causes however render the Government averse to conceding to foreigners any new privileges, or in fact to giving them, officially, any immunities whatsoever, it being their interest to throw as many obstacles into the way as they possibly can, in order to be paid for each infringement of the established regulations, and of these there are so many, that, if they were all observed or noticed, no day could pass but every foreign individual in Canton would be found to have outraged some one of the laws of the celestial Empire. That such petty trespasses as may daily occur may however not be wholly unatoned for, the mandarins levy an annual tax upon the headservant of each house, according, in amount, to what the extent of his master's business may allow him to proclaim, and such is the force of habit example, but few of these head-servants receive any wages whatever, from this foreign masters but are entitled to whatthey can get.

It has often struck us that thepresent system of government of China is in some measure analogous to thatof France under the 15th and 16th Louis,—the same corruption and venality are to be found every where, but though the materials for discontent exist, and their existence be known to some, we apprehend that the sensibilities of the sons of Han are not as quick as the gaul's; long submission has rendered them callous to oppression, and China will probably jog on under the same yoke it now drags along for many years before the nation can become aware of how much they are oppressed, or of the possibility of striking off their fetters.

It is now about 300 years since the first Europeans visited China, and, in spite of their continual efforts to obtain a footing in the country, only the Portuguese have succeeded in holding the lease of a small neck of land, where, cut off entirely from the Empire at large, and from closer intercourse with it's subjects, they are, in a manner, allowed to govern themselves, though under the supremacy of the Chinese Government. The extreme reluctance the Chinese have ever shewn to admit strangers, partly probably arises from their peculiar manners and the pride which a long course of prosperity has engendered, and partly from the nature of their Government, which being in the hands, not of the children of the soil, but of foreign conquerors, these, while they can only be upheld by extreme watchfulness, dread every collision with foreign nations as threatening the subversion of their power. But these are not the only reasons why the Chinese are shy of any more intercourse with foreigners—the first visitants from Europe were little better than pirates, and the treatment the Chinese received at their hands must have created a strong pre udice which has not even yet worn away, and the character given in Chinese popular tales of the barbarians from the west is that of fierce bloodthirsty savages. Within the last 300 years China has made no progress in civilization and it will probably not be denied that at that period the Chinese surpassed the Europeans in most of the arts of civilized life.—The Chinese though they feared, also felt contempt for, the foreigners, and this first impression has not yet been altogether erased, as from the isolation of the people they have no means of knowing the enormous strides the northern countries of Europe have made, and how far the flowery nation has been left behind by them. During the reigns of Kanghe, Yung-ching, and Kien-lung, the Jesuits obtained considerable influence through the exertions of some very clever men, of their order, and Christian churches began to be raised every where; there was every prospect that the catholic religion would have spread over the whole Empire. The Jesuits proceeded however too rashly in their plans of ambition, and Kien-lung began to feel that they were raising a power which might at some future day be employed against him; his dislike to the professors of Christianity became strengthened by the foolish quarrels among themselves and by the pretensions the pope made to regulate the conduct of the Emperor's subjects, as well as by the attempts of the Franciscan monks to supplant the Jesuits, whose order had then become a mark for persecution in most countries in Europe, and became all but completely suppressed. The Jesuits could no longer support themselves as formerly, but the other religious orders did not succeed in replacing them. They were all banished and the Christian worship was strictly prohibited. At the present moment there is not a single European priest in Peking, but the Society of Propaganda fide still send out annually some young men from France who penetrate into the country taking charge of such Christian communities as still exist in China. The same society also sends young Chinese to Europe for the purpose of religious instruction, and they likewise, on their return to China, officiate as priests. It is however hardly to be expected that the intercourse thus upheld between Europe and China can be of much advantage to the Chinese in a worldly point of view, or render them acquainted with the actual social condition of Europe. These young men, Europeans as well as Chinese, are brought up in strict monastic seclusion, and we will hope that they at least become useful in improving the moral condition of their flocks, a reward which form their devotion and perseverance in the task prescribed to them, they are so well entitled to reap.

At about the time when the christian religious orders lost their influence in China, the commerce between this country and Europe began to gain in importance, but the jealousy of the Government restricted this little by little to the port of Canton, and prevented any intercourse between its own subjects and Europeans beyond that which was absolutely necessary for the purposes of commerce. The foreigners were restricted to a few houses in the suburbs of Canton and had intercourse only with such as the Government appointed to carry on the trade. It is therefore not to be expected that commerce has yet done much to make the chinese better acquainted with us, or to remove the prejudices which they have been led to conceive against us. Nor was it the interest of the English Company, who alone carried on a trade of great importance, to allow it to spread so much as to lose the possibility of control. The growing luxury and riches of Europe and America have since encreased the demand for produce from China at least fifty fold, and the restrictions to which on our part the trade had been, for nearly a century, confined, have been removed; encroachments upon the restrictive laws of the Empire by this new trade are daily attempted, and the corruption of the Mandarins lends itself to these trespasses. The free-traders become bolder from success, and will probably soon break down many of the barriers which have hitherto stood in the way of unrestricted intercourse. How to do this with safety and success, is the object of our contemplations, and we shall follow up our observations on this subject in our next number.

We have had only two arrivals during the week, the Syed Khan and the Ariel both from Calcutta and Singapore. The former brings Calcutta advices to the 22nd November, and by the latter we have received the Singapore Free Press of 14th December, of which we have made a few extracts.

We mentioned in our last that the Pilot of a vessel at Whampoa, supposed to have brought Opium, had been punished by the Chinese authorities with the wooden collar. We are glad now to be able to state that the poor fellow has been set at liberty owing to the remonstrances of the Captain of the vessel, who protested that he would not leave Whampoa unless the Pilot was sent on board, to which the Hong-merchants, desirous not to protract the vessel's stay at Whampoa, at last assented.

The Chinese New-year's day (yesterday) has gone by without much distress for money, owing probably to the very little business transacted in this compared to former seasons. The scarcity of money last year made many of the Chinese encroach on their former strictness in settling before new-year's day, and this having become old custom now, may also be one of the reasons of the scarcity of money not being so much felt. We know however of instances where 2 per cent interest per month and even more have been paid for cash.

Steam communication between India and China. A plan for communication by steam between Calcutta and the Straits has been circulated by the Chamber of Commerce here, with a view to interest this community in it's being carried into effect. The company which it is proposed to establish at Calcutta is to begin with a capital of 5 lakhs of Rupees divided into 1000 shares. We augur favorably of this enterprize, should it be confined to Bengal and the Straits only, and be conducted with as much economy as possible, but it is also proposed to extend the line of communication by steam to China, a project which for the present, we fear, is not likely to meet with success, however desirable such an establishment may be in many respects. The expenses of a steamer between this and Singapore would be much greater than there is, in our limited community, any probability of repayment; particularly if, to make it really useful, there should be a regular line of steamers, and without that, supposing us to be restricted to the arrival of one steamer occasionally only, we do not even see that much advantage or convenience could be derived from it. It is only lately that steam-communication between India and England has been attempted, and is now supported by the Government of India, nor would private enterprize alone have been able to do it, even between countries, where there is such immense intercourse, infinitely greater than it will probably ever be between China, the Straits and Bengal. The community that here would make use of the convenience of a steamer does not exceed 200 individuals; there are not as many in Singapore. Passengers would therefore be few, and the only way in which a steamer between this and Bengal could make a freight would be by lading Opium. But under present circumstances, it is very doubtful whether speculators in Opium would think it worth their while to pay a higher freight than is now given to the Clippers, for the sake of forestalling the market by a few days, and such desire when it does exist will always be liable to fluctuation. Whilst the intercourse with China remains limited to so very small a community as at present, any attempt at communication by steam, unless it receive pecuniary assistance from the Bengal Government, appears to us premature, nor should we think that property invested in this scheme would be safely laid out. China must be more open to intercourse with other nations before such projects can ever be successful.

Giving Credit to outside men in Canton.

It has been the custom of foreigners to sell several minor articles to outside shopmen; many of whom have shown themselves quite as punctual in their dealings as some of the Hong-merchants.

A silversmith in China Street, lately in very good credit, run in debt this season to a foreign merchant to a considerable amount for such articles; on being pressed for payment, it was found impossible to recover the goods, or the purchase-money. After considerable delay, the foreign merchant came to the resolution of petitioning the viceroy; which he did last month. The viceroy shortly replied that the foreigner having dealt with an outside merchant, he, the viceroy, could give him no redress; left him to his own resources, and hinted at his helping himself.

On this, the foreigner waited on Howqua explained his situation, and requested his Howqua's, assistance and advice.

Howqua agreed to call a consoo of the hongs, to summons the man, and remonstrate with him.

The Consoo was held, but the silversmith refused to attend. Thus situated, the foreigner, attended by five armed men, entered the shop of the silversmith in old China Street, on the 18th inst., took possession of his house, which he retains, and of all his stock in trade jewellery, furniture, &c.

The seizing creditor first intended to expose the rapius preadus to sale at public auction on the spot; but circumstances induced him to change this resolution. Of the house and ground, however he still retains possession, for the satisfaction of his unliquidated claims.

The consent of the Chinese authorities to this measure may be implied, not only by their non interference, but by the seizing creditor being attended by his own Chinese servants, whilst living in the shop of the silversmith, in precisely the same manner as when resident in his own house; and break fast, dinners, and beds were prepared as regulary as in any house in Canton.

Since writing above, we have been informed that rather late in the night of the 21st inst. the security merchant Mowqua, with his nephew, called on the seizing creditor at his own residence, conveying a message from the viceroy that the goods distrained should be divided amongst all the foreign creditors of the silversmith—and we understand there are several. The viceroy, by his mouth piece, Mowqua, remarked that such division was reasonable: the creditor, however, who has studied dialectic in a different school, was of a diametrically opposite opinion, and positively refused to admit of any participation by the other creditors in his hard won spoils. Canton Register 23d January.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

ARRIVED—British. Syed Khan, Ovenstone, from Calcutta, 24th November, and Singapore 11th December. Ariel, Warden, from Calcutta, and Singapore 17th December

PASSENGER—Per Ariel, Mr. A. L. Johnston

SAILED or DESPATCHED.—Brit. Julia, Richards, for Singapore and Calcutta. Sarah Birkett, Atkins, (omitted before) for Manila. Lady MacNaughten, Hustwick, for London. General Kyd, Foord, for London. Isabel, Jones, for London, Despatched this day. Sophia, for the Cape of Good Hope and London, and French Balguerie, Desse, for Bordeaux.

PASSENGERS. — Per General Kyd, Mrs. Foord, Mrs. Edwards, Mr. J. Mackenzie.

The Ariel, for Singapore and Calcutta will be despatched on Monday next. the 29th at 6 p. m.

Capt. Warden of the Ariel, spoke the Eleanor, Capt. Lyons, to the southward of St Johns; she had a few days before, in a gale, carried away her foremast and maintopmast, and was jurrygging. A report that the Bengal Packet had foundered seems to have originated in a misapprehension of a communication from Capt. Lyons; she is bound for the west-coast and was seen by the Eleanor, which is all that is at present known of her.

The Sir Charles Malcolm, so long expected, had been obliged to put back to Singapore, having encountered the same Typhoong on the 16th or 17th Novbr. that has proved so fatal to many other vessels. She has sprung all her masts and had her boats and spars from on deck washed away, and has been obliged to throw about 400 bales of Cotton over board. Her cargo and hull are both supposed to be much damaged.

The Glenelg, after refitting at Singapore, had sailed thence for Bombay.

The Futtay Salam, and Antonio Pereira, had arrived at Singapore from here, the latter after a passage of 5 hours and 20 minutes.

The Spanish Brig Cantabro, had been condemned at Singapore and sold. The Bilbaino, had refitted and sailed for Manila.

LATEST DATES, from ENGLAND, 6th August P Anna Robertson. UNITED STATES, 1st August P Liberty. CALCUTTA, 23d November P Syed Khan, SINGAPORE, 18th December P Ariel. JAVA, 4th December P Morrison. MANILA, 22nd December P John Gilpin. BOMBAY, 2d November via Calcutta.

VESSELS EXPECTED.—From ENGLAND, Hashemy, Orixa, Caledonia. CALCUTTA, Waterwitch, Arabian. BOMBAY, Sir C. Malcolm, David Clark, Golconda, Mary Dugdale, Blake, Walmer Castle, MADRAS, Ann. SYDNEY, Hero. VALPARAISO, Philantrope.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

The Chinese New-year commenced yesterday and as all accounts are paid up previous to that day, very little business is done, indeed the Hoppo's office was closed on the 23rd and will not, we understand, open until the 2nd February during which period nothing can be landed or shipped off.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS, continue in fair demand, but at rather a reduction in price. A heavy parcel of American Grey goods have been lately disposed of, at, we hear, from 2¾ @ 4 $. according to quality and width.

COTTON YARN,—without improvement.

WOOLLENS.—A sale of SPANISH STRIPES, was reported to us in the early part of the week at 1.30 @ 1.35, but unless of very good quality they will not command this price, and the demand is generally very languid. LONGELLS, have rather declined, but we do not alter quotations as that may have arisen from the approach of the holydays CAMLETS, Dutch, are very low, some having been sold as low as 33, and English, well assorted, both as to color and quality, $ 38 @ 38½.

METALS.—LEAD, will sell more readily at our quotation; IRON, is in less demand.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—PEPPER and BETELNUT are without material alteration. TIN is a little firmer

RICE,—continues depressed as before.

COTTON—No transactions have been reported to us, except of some Madras at the former rates, for Tinnevelly 10.5 @ 10.6 and the Nellore at 7. 7. Both the Bombay and Bengal are very depressed.

OPIUM.—The small foreign passage boats appear to be still very active between Lintin and Whampoa, although the Mandarins are said to be on the look out for seizures. The deliveries at Lintin are also more than was expected, being up to the 22d inst. Patna, old 2, new, 290; Benares, old, 1, new, 95; Malwa, 515; Total 903 Chests. One or two small vessels are also employed in deliveries, of small parcels to the westward.—Prices are however very low, and with every prospect of being still lower. New Patna has been sold as low as 540 @ 550. New Benares 490; Malwa 410 @ 415, and, the stock of all kinds is excessively large. Old Patna is unsaleable, but we think it unnecessary to alter quotation.

EXPORTS.

NANKING RAW SILK.—No further sales have been reported to us, but the holders do not at present appear disposed to lower their demands. A further supply is expected in about a month or 6 weeks.

TEA.—Our quotations remain as last week, there having been very few transactions.

DOCTRINE OF FATE.

(From the Indo Chinese Gleaner.)

MR. EDITOR—The following Essay, which fell into my hands, upwards of two years ago, contains, what I consider, a curious, faithful, and instructive, developement of the workings of a pagan mind, under the influence of gross error; and under the power of principles which make a near approximation to truth. The translation which I then made, with the remarks and notes, I now send for a place in your Miscellany—not doubting but the Essay will be interesting to those who make human nature their study.

A TRANSLATION OF AN ESSAY DELIVERED BY THE TEACHER, YUEN-LEAOU-FAN;—" SHOWING HOW TO LAY THE FOUNDATION OF A GOOD DESTINY," OR " HOW A MAN MAY INFLUENCE HIS OWN FATE."

" While yet a mere youth, I lost my father by death. My aged mother commanded me to lay aside literary pursuits, and turn my attention to medicine, saying, "in this way you may gain a living for yourself, be useful to others, and become famous: moreover it was always your father's wish. "

Sometime after this in the monastery TSZE-YUH, * I met with and old man of a tall figure, and long beard, and who, as sir and manner were those of a Seen. † He told me that I was destined to fill an official situation; and that next year I should make great progress in learning. He also asked why I had left off study: I told him the reason. He answered—" my name is KUNG; I belong to the province of YUN-NAN. ‡ I have a correct copy of CHAOU-TSZE-HOANG KEEN'S Treatise on the Principles of Fate, which, if you please, I will instruct you in. " I accordingly took him home with me, resolved to try whether his calculations would be fulfilled or not. Next year, as he had foretold, my thoughts disposed me to study. The teacher, KUNG, by the laws of numerical destiny, calculated, that in the examination in the Been, I should be the fortieth on the list—at the examination in the Foo, ¶ the seventy-first; and at the examination in the provincial city, the ninth. Next year I accordingly went to the examinations, and, in all the three places, my name stood on the list exactly as he had said. He again divined for me, pointing out the felicities and infelicities of my whole life. He said, that at such an annual examination, my name should have such a rank on the list.—In such a year I should be a Ling-sang, *—and in such another year I should be a KUNG SANG; that in such a year, after attaining the rank of KUNG-SANG, I should be chosen to fill the office of TA-yin, in the province of Sze-chuen †; that, after holding the office for two years and a half, I should ask permission to retire;—and that in the fiftythird year of my life, in the eighth day, at two o'clock in the morning, I should die, during sleep —but, alas! should leave no son behind me!"

" I attentively observed all that he said; and in future found that, at the examinations, my degrees came out exactly in the order which he had determined. KUNG calculated, that, during the time of my being a LIN-SANG, I should eat of the imperial bounty, ‡ ninety-one SHIH and five TOW‖ of rice. But it so happened, that when I obtained the tutor's permission to take the degree of KUNG-SANG, I had only eaten seventy SHIH; pointing out that a little. But on my appointment being opposed by the tutor's deputy, was postponed to the fourth year of the cycle, when I was permitted to take my rank; so that adding the bounty now received to the the former, it amounted, in all, exactly to the ninety-one SHIH and five TOW. In consequence of this, It was more confirmed in the belief, that promotion and degradation are fixed by an immoveable rate; and hence I became totally indifferent to active exertion.

" After attaining the degree of KUNG-SANG, I went to Peking, and remained there for a year; during the whole of which time I continued inactive, sitting in silence and retirement.

" In the sixth year of the cycle, as I was passing through NAN-YUNG, on my way home, before entering the College I sought out YUN-KUH, § master of religious quiescence, and a Priest of Fuh, who dwelt at TSZE-HEA* hill. We sat down together in the same chamber, and for the space of three days and three nights, closed not our eyes in sleep. YUN-KUH said " The sole reason why every man rises not to the perfection of a sage is, that ambitious and irregular thoughts wind themselves around the heart,—You have sitten here for three days, and I have not perceived you display a single ambitious and irregular thought."—To which I answered — " My glory and disgrace, my life and death, have all been calculated by the teacher, KUNG; all is immoveably fixed by a numerical destiny; so that if (hoping to better my circumstances) I even wished to cherish an aspiring thought, it would avail me nothing."

* TSZE-YUN, literally "A CLOUD OF COMPASSION."—The Chinese are fond of imposing significant names on persons, things, and place; especially wherein religion is at all concerned.

† SZEN, an imaginary class of perfect beings.

‡ YUN-NAN, literally "the clouds of the south."

¶ HEEN, is a small district, Foo, a large one; both are subject to the jurisdiction of the SANG, or provincial city. Literary candidates must be examined first in the HEEN, then in the Foo; next in the SANGS and finally in the KING, or metropolis.

* LIN-SANG and KUNG SANG, are epithets given to those who attain literary.

† SZE-chuen, literally " the Four Streams." Water being abundant in that province.

‡ IMPERIAL BOUNTY; i. e. an allowance granted by the Emperor to those scholars who attain the rank of Ling-sang; partly as a reward for their past diligence, and partly to assist and encourage them to aspire after higher attainments.

‖ SHIH and TOW, are the names of grain measures. Shih means a stone. Weights and measures in Chinese are expressed by the same terms.

§ YUNKUH, i. e. " the beclouded valley; an epithet probably assumed in consequence of that retirement from bustle, and seclusion from society, which the Priests of Fuh generally affect; and which sometimes leads them to the deep glens of the mountains and dark recesses of the woods, where they build their monasteries.

* TSEE HEA, i.e. " perching on the boughs in the shade"—borrowed, perhaps, from the circumstance of many of the temples being built in shady groves.

" YUN-KUH smiled and said, " Why, I took you for a man of superior stamp; I find you possessed of the vulgar ideas of mere common people. The life of man, in general, is certainly not without a destiny; but they are mere common men only over whom destiny reigns. It cannot impede those who aim to attain the summit of virtue—nor can it binds those who go on to the extreme of wickedness. It is now twenty-two years since KUNG told your fortune; and to this day you have not moved forward a single hair's breadth;—is it not perfectly evident from this, that you are a mere common-place being ?"

" I asked him,—" Can a man escape the decree of Fate ?"—to which he answered, " Fate is of our own making, and happiness the result of our own conduct.—This is what the SHE-KING call "clear instruction." In our sacred books, (i. e. Books of Fuh,) it is said, " Seek to be famous, and you will become famous; seek wealth and honor, and you will obtain wealth and honor, seek sons and daughters, and you will have sons and daughters; seek long life, and you will obtain long life." Now, lying words are what SHIH-KIA, (i. e. Fuh) exceedingly warns men against; surely, then, if these were vain words, the divinities themselves would never employ them to deceive men !" I replied, MUNG-TSZE says, " Seek and you shall find; seeking rests with oneself."—Goodness, virtue, benevolence, and justice, may indeed be earnestly sought; but as to fame, riches, and honors—how can we seek eagerly after them with any certain prospect of success ?" YUN-KUH said, " The words of MUNG-TSZE are not erroneous; but you explain them erroneously. Have you not observed what LUH-TSOO says ? " The whole field of happiness is confined within the circumference of an inch :" it is to be sought in the heart; which, when once effectually moved, insures success. Seeking rests with ourselves, We may not only gain goodness, virtue, benevolence, and justice; but also literary fame, riches, and honors. We may attain both the external and the internal. Hence it is plain that seeking has a great influence upon getting. But if a man never turn inward, and reflect on what he himself may accomplish, but suffer his thoughts to wander abroad, in search of some other help—then, indeed, he will find, (as MUNG-TSZE has also said) that seeking has certain rules; and that obtaining is fixed by Fate. Both the internal and external will be lost; and all his seeking, entirely fruitless. I beg to know what destinies Mr. KUNG assigned you, when he read your fortune."—I told him the truth of the matter. YUN-KUH said—" but what is your own opinion; do you think that you ought to obtain farther literary rank; and that you are entitled to posterity ?" After reflecting for a considerable time, I replied—" I am not entitled to either.—For, with respect to persons who obtain literary rank, they have certain fortunate omens about them; but my luck is poor indeed, and I am unable, by an accumulation of merits, to thicken the foundations of my destiny.—I feel averse to exertion, and have no patience with other men. At times I am apt to overvalue my talents to the discredit of other men.—My actions are heedless and vain.—I speak without thought, and pour oceans of slight and mockery on others.—These are all omens of a very thin destiny. How then can I expect to rise to literary rank ? As to posterity, I observe that the filthy parts in nature swarm with animated beings, while the crystal stream is generally without fish—but I love purity, (i. e. perhaps CELIBACY.) The peaceful, can nourish all things; but I am prone to anger. Love is the original cause of procreation—apathy is the root of destruction. But I am parsimoniously sparing of my reputation for chastity; and cannot give up my own advantage to save other people. I exhaust my breath in fruitless loquacity—I am addicted to drinking, which dries up the productive moisture of the body. I am fond of sitting up late at night, and know not how to nourish my animal spirits; besides these, I have very many other errors which I cannot enumerate." (To be continued,)

TOWN-HALL.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE UNFORTUNATE LOVE AFFAIR BETWEEN MISS AMELIA HOBBS AND MR. JEREMIAH DOBBS.—Mr. Jeremiah Dobbs was a short, thickset little specimen of the human race, with a face bearing some distant resemblance to an exaggerated muffin, and which exhibited a tameness of physiognomy by no means captivating, and Mr. Jeremiah Dobbs followed the honourable calling of a shoemaker, and was, moreover, desperately attached to a young lady somewhat of his own size, and bearing likewise the brief patronymic of Hobbs. But Miss Amelia Hobbs did not return the attachment of Mr Jeremiah Dobbs, and whenever Mr. Dobbs attempted to be more than usually violent in the manifestation of his love, Miss Hobbs would indict him for a misdemeanor, and this was the cause of their both being found in the Town-hall on the idential morning in question.

Magistrate (to complainant)—What charge do you prefer against Mr. Dobbs?

Miss Amelia (in a lisping tone)—Why, thir, you muth know that my mother and myself occupy a firth floor front in Blackman-street, Borough, and the defendant, who uthed to be our floormaker rethides next door. About four months ago I thent him a note with my meathure, dethiring him to make me a pair of thoes: well, thir, when he brought them home he told me he had fallen violently in love with my foot, and thaid he should never be happy until he reposthed in my arms. I gave him of courth a flat refuthal, but thince then, thir, I have been conthtantly annoyed by Mr. Dobbth thinging to a fiddle or playing on a hurdy-gurdy evethy night under my bedroom window. Next morning, when I athked him what he did it for, he thed, ath impudently ath could be, that he was therenading me.

Magistrate—And pray what was the meaning of "therenading ?"

Miss Hobbs—Why, thir, I thuppose its the art of keeping perthons awake when they want to be athleep. (Roars of laughter.) Yeth, thir, but it was not to be laughed at I can athure you, thir; for last night, just as I wath retiring for the night, I heard a tapping at the window, when who thould I thee but Mr. Dobbs, who thed he wanted to make love to me, and when I thed I would not lithen to him, he wrote thomething on a bit of paper, which he threw into the room. But I picked it up thir, and here it is,

A verse in the handwriting of the defendant was here produced, and ran as follows :—

Charming creature Miss Amelia, Hobbs,
Discard at once your former lovers—rot 'em—
Nor see the hopes of Jeremiah Dobbs,
Come rumbling, tumbling from the top to bottom.
—(Laughter.).

Mr. Dobbs, who was a true specimen of a cockney Romeo, vehemently protested against having his poetry turned into ridicule, but upon receiving a severe admonition from the magistrate, warning him against renewing the disturbances, he promised never again to bestow his love on such an unworthy object, but find among the Hebes of the Borough Market, one who would reciprocate his affections and return his love in a less equivocal manner than his hard hearted Amelia.

The charge was then dismissed, the love-stricken shoemaker glancing daggers at his Amarylis, and exclaiming in the unadulterated Bow-bell dialect as he left the office.—

"Yell there is von thing that my sorrows yet may soothe.

"The course of true love never did run smooth."

FOREIGN NEWS.

SPAIN.

It was on Sunday, the 15th ult., that Espartero and his army took the oath to the constitution.

It was on Monday, the 16th, that 5,000 men, headed by Espartero and Col. Webbe, left Madrid for La Granja and Segovia, but Espartero remained at Aranjuez. On the day a motion was made in the Cortes of censure against the government, and calling for the appointment of a Junta to manage the war; this was rejected; but on that day the French ambassador, at a public dinner, said the obstacles to a change of ministry were removed.

On the 17th the division of Van Halen refused to march against the Carlists, unless ministers resigned Van Halen immediately laid down his command. Ribero took his place, and the soldiers and sergeants followed him; the officers, sixty-five in number, were arrested.

On the 18th Calatrava resigned, and Don Eusebio Bardaji y Azara was appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs in his place; the decree of appointment was addressed to Mendizabal, but on the same day he and all the other ministers resigned; and the Espartero cabinet, of which we gave the list last week, was appointed, the decree being addressed to Bardaji. The resignation of ministers was hastened by a petition presented to the Queen against them by many officers of the army, but more by the desire of the Estatutists, the intrigues of French ambassadors, and the ambition of Espartero.

The sixty-five officers arrested by Espartero effected their escape, and added to the ferment in the city. On the 19th the Gazette published the names of the ministry. On the 20th news reached Madrid that Escalera had been murdered by his troops for unwillingness to march against the Carlists in Segovia; the insurgent soldiers were at Miranda. Another military insurrection had broken out in Tyarand, but it was readily repressed. On the 21st Madrid was tranquil, but it appeared that only three of the appointed ministry had actually accepted office.

The British squadron on the Spanish coast is reinforced by six ships at the request of the Queen.

The Carlists, it appears, evacuated Segovia, leaving only some sick and wounded in the Alcazar. Vigo pursued, and the whole province of Castile was evacuated. The Carlists marched to the rendezvous at Soria. The heavy cannon intended for the battery of Segovia was sent back to Madrid.

Lieut. White, of the Royal Marines, was taken prisoner near Oyarzun, on the 16th ultimo, and it having been reported that he had been shot by the Carlists, the British Colonel Owen wrote on the subject to Gurbelaldi, the Carlist general commanding there, to which the following answer was returned, signed Bartolome Gurbelaldi, and dated Tolosa, August 17. It is addressed to Lieut.-Colonel Owen.

Sir—Lieut. White, belonging to a battalion under your orders, and for whom you interest yourself in your obliging letter of yesterday, has, as you justly state, been made a prisoner in the environs of Oyarzun by the troops blockading that place, and conducted to my head quarters. He was received and has been treated with all the consideration due to a prisoner of his rank. He has been provided with lodgings, and a soldier given him for a servant: the same attention is paid to him as if he belonged to the army of Charles V. Of this you must have been convinced on reading the letters written to my self which I forwarded to you by Colonel Ibero. I shall continue the same line of conduct towards this officer so long as he remains in my power. Although Mr. White is not entitled to the benefit of the Elliot treaty, my feelings and habits permit me not to act otherwise. Far different is the conduct observed towards the Carlists made prisoners at Irun, and sent in St. Sebastian: the treatment they have received is most infamous, as you will perceive on perusing a memorial which I have received from them, and which I herewith enclose.

It is my most ardent desire that you should send one of your officers to my head-quarters, in order that he may be enabled to repeat to you the manner in which the prisoners belonging to the army of the usurping government are treated in this province. I feel certain that every Englishman will blush at having co-operated to support a cause so unjust. I have the honour to be, &c.

"Cadiz, Malaga, and Barcelona have sent to the Queen remonstrances more than energetic upon M. Mendizabal's partiality to English commerce," says a French paper. [This may be true of Barcelona; but Malaga and Cadiz depend on English commerce.]

Barcelona was greatly agitated on the morning of the 20th ult., and a sanguinary uproar was dreaded in the evening. Madrid, at the same date, was undisturbed; but, if we believe the Constitutionnel's advices, the ferment was hourly increasing. Gangs of the Liberals scoured the streets with shouts of "Down with ministers! Down with the government!" The national guard demanded the dismissal of Espartero and his troops, and the re-establishment of the Calatrava cabinet, and the municipality and provincial deputation were for bringing the Count de Luchana to trial. At Vittoria on the 17th, the governor, Gonzalez, the commandant of the national guard, and twelve other officers, are stated to have been put to death. The Pretender, it is added, have appointed their leader, Zurbano, governor of the place.

The resignations of public officers were pouring in from all quarters. Those of Messrs. Mona, Surra, and Armendariz, Under Secretaries of State of the Finance and Home Departments, had been accepted by the Queen Regent, a circumstance which had much theorized several influential persons. The writer adds—"This evening at seven o'clock, M. Pio Pita Pizarro and Count de Luchana sent in their resignations to the Regent, who did not immediately make known her resolution in respect of them. It is understood, ' I see that everybody abandons me ' Her Majesty had scarcely finished this sentence when the resignation of M. Chacon was placed in her hands." The utmost uneasiness prevails in Madrid.

The resignation of Baron de Meer as Captain-General of Catalonia is accepted. Generals Pastor and Puig had also tendered theirs.

The Carlist journal, the Young Observer, published at Solsona, states that the Marquis of Santmanat, Baron of Peramola Don Manuel Milla, a canon of Tarragona, and the Marquis of Villapalma, all members of the superior Royal Junta of Catalonia, had reached Berga, where they were to fix, pro tempore, the seat of the government.

The Christinos continue to be blockaded in Seo d'Urgel by the united bands of Ros d'Eroles, Rep del Oil, and Camos Cruss, amounting to about 3,000 men. The Insurgents, on the other hand, had been compelled to raise the siege of San Juan de las Abadesas, after a sharp engagement, in which Brigadier Arreba routed them, with a loss of 80 killed and 160 wounded. The Carlist chief Machaco had been arrested by his own soldiers, conveyed to Solsona, where he was to be tried by court-martial, having, they said, treacherously delivered the important pass of Capsacosta into the hands of Bastos de Meer.

The Carlists have obtained possession of Mora, on the Ebro, by capitulation.

The Paris journal, L' Europe, contains the following letter, dated Perpignan, 24th ult.:—" The English are we may say, masters of Barcelona. General Pastor has been ordered by the Madrid government to deliver into their hands the fort of Los Atarazanas, which commands the harbour of Barcelona and a great portion of the city. The British admiral has placed a garrison in that fort, in which not a single Spanish soldier remains. The squadron stationed between Rosas and Alicant is very formidable, and has on board upwards of 6,000 soldiers. The Barcelona station alone consists of five first rate ships of the line and a number of other vessels of inferior size."

It is generally reported that General Seoane has received a stern challenge from the officers of Espartero's division since his speech in the Cortes on the subject on their revolt.

Letters from Teruel, dated the 17th assert that General Oraa had proceeded to join Rovera, who was in the neighbourhood of Santa Eulalia. The factions were there assembled in the Sierra of Pores, Cadrillas, and Monte Agua to, with the Pretender.

Brigadier Alcain, who was recently ordered to La Mancha to put down the factions in that province, appear, to be succeeding in the objects of his mission. He has had two encounters with the rebels in that district, in which they suffered considerable loss.

On the 21st, MM. Bardaxi, Pita Pizarro, and San Miguel were the only individuals whose services the Queen had finally secured. M. Salvato was also believed to have accepted a seat. As for General Espartero, he was said to have consented to enter the cabinet, but to have declined the presidency, as incompatible with his military command.—The Atlas, September 3.

PORTUGAL.

FALMOUTH, Aug. 31 :—The Esprit, brig of war, arrived to-day from Lisbon with intelligence of three days later date than the information furnished by the Iberia. It appears that the affairs of Portugal have arrived at a crisis, the termination of which will, in all human probability, be in the sacrifice of human life. It is certain that a plan has been arranged by the Charterist chiefs to enter the city of Lisbon simultaneously with an attack which, on a given signal of the firing of two canons, is to be made on the guards at its several parts by the friends of the cause within it. Prince Ferdinand was reported to have gone to the camp of Saldanha, but with an intention of returning forthwith; afterwards the Queen and her consort were to escape, if possible, on board the Hastings, when the movement would take place. The Duke of Palmella was said to have joined the Duke of Terceira, from France. Saldanha has declared that he will not lay down his arms until the power of the National Guard is entirely subdued and their arms delivered up. Her Majesty was at the Palace das Necessidades. The British line-of-battle ships Hastings, Malabar, and Minden were prepared to protect their fellow-subjects. A horrible piece of advice was very thickly circulated about the streets; it was—" Mark the residence of foreigners, patriots! and mark them with fire, and make their bodies a barricade at the entrance of your city."

PROCLAMATION OF THE DUKE OF TERCEIRA.

Countrymen.—The unhappy state of the kingdom, and my oath of fidelity to the Queen and the constitutional charter of the monarchy, compel me to unite my forces to those of the other noble defenders of the country and of true liberty. The nation has been pressed down by a few ill-disposed persons, who tyrannise over it—who oppress the most illustrious citizens, who, in the field of battle, insured against the usurper the triumph of the code of our liberties, and the sacred rights of the daughter of Don Pedro.

The complete overthrow of order, the miseries which the perjurous of September have caused the country, the absolute discredit into which they have fallen, the indecency and horrible turbulence of the so-called Congress, its measures of madness and fury, its insults to the throne, the shameful influence of persons who have caused the disgrace of honourable citizens who have covered themselves with glory in fighting the battles of the country, have induced me to take up arms. Our exertions will be responded to by all Portuguese worthy of the name, and they will join us in this noblest enterprise, which has for its object the saving of the Queen and the charter from the ferocity of their enemies.

People of Lisbon—I am inspired with a thirst of vengeance in consequence of the insults that have been offered to the army—that army which has gained so much esteem from the respectable part of the nation by the services it has rendered to the country and to liberty. My object, and that of my companions in arms, is to save the monarchy from the abyss into which unworthy men seek to precipitate it, to restore the constitutional charter, and to co-operate with them to establish a government of order, of peace, patriotism, and credit.

Countrymen—Which among you whose heart has not beat with indignation at the insults offered to the daughter of Don Pedro—the Queen for the consolidation of whose throne so much Portuguese blood has been split? Come, then, make common cause with the brave men who are in arms for the charter. Let the soldiers of Villa de Praia, of Oporto, of Almorta, and of Lisbon, combine with me in this glorious cause. Who will neglect this call to glory, and not make an effort to save liberty from the trammels of despotism?

Let us renew our original compact—let us secure to the Queen her throne—to Portugal peace, and an union among all its citizens. Let our mottoes be, "The Queen" and "The Charter." With them we have conquered the Usurper, and with them we will restore peace, the legitimate throne, and liberty.

Duke de TERCEIRA.

LONDON MARKET.

September 1st.

There has been great brukness in our Market. During the last fortnight a rapid and large advance has taken place in some descriptions. Bohea are 3½d. per lb. dearer than on 24th July. III.

BRITISH AND CHINESE RELATIONS.

We have, in our two preceding papers on the subject, attempted to point out to our readers in how far the foreign trade has become necessary to the Chinese, and in what way the British may expect the co-operation of the Chinese Government officers in maintaining that trade uninterrupted. We have in the first instance shewn that the existence of a very great number of the natives of the soil depends upon the exportation of their produce to foreign countries, and secondly, that from the peculiar mode of Government, where responsibility proceeds downwards, that is from the Emperor to the high Mandarin, from him again to his subordinates and so on, and the venality resulting from this system, any thing like a change in the trade, as at present carried on, coming from the Chinese, is not likely to be brought about, but that at the same time the Chinese would, officially at least, resist as much as they can any encroachments upon the barriers their pride or jealousy have hitherto opposed to a more unrestrained intercourse with foreign traders.

Every foreigner first coming to China feels chafed and justly so, at the restraint imposed on him, and our residence here more resembles perhaps that of the garrison in a fortress beleaguered by enemies than the existence of visitors come to a friendly country to follow a peaceable and, to the country they visit, a profitable calling. That therefore inroads should be made upon the restrictions insisted on by the Chinese, is not to be wondered at, nor that, from reasons we have before explained, the Chinese should submit to them rather than have recourse to coercion, which might lead to a temporary suspension of trade or even to hostile retribution. In such cases of irruption on their barriers of exclusiveness the Chinese, instead of using force, have hitherto generally contented themselves with issuing edicts in which such practices of "evil disposed barbarians" are much blamed, and the Hong-merchants threatened with punishment if they do not put a stop to them. These edicts seem however to be intended for no other use than to acquire for the local Government, in the eyes of their Peking masters, the reputation of activity. Edicts reprobating and prohibiting such or such practices have gone forth; people to whom they are addressed are ordered to "tremblingly obey"—after which the Edict is laid on the shelf, and officially supposed to have been obeyed. Meanwhile the practices complained of continue and, while time glides on, has it begins to sanction them. In this manner most of the few indulgences we now enjoy have been obtained, and all of them are liable to be assailed by edicts prohibiting their continuance.

That such a state of things is none of the most desirable partly on account of the many restraints to which we are still subject, and partly because even the slight indulgences we now enjoy are liable at any moment to being disturbed, cannot be denied, but before we come to consider by what means our position here is likely to be improved, it may be well to enumerate all our grievances, or such at least as at present press most heavily on us.

The chief cause then, of our unpleasant position, and from this we think most of the list of grievances we shall hereafter detail, will be found to spring, is the affectation of the Chinese Government to treat strangers coming from foreign countries to trade, as objects deserving its compassion, whom it suffers to visit the country from motives of "celestial benevolence" but to whom it accords no right whatever, and who may be sent away agreeably to the Imperial pleasure. From viewing the residence of foreigners in Canton in this light, a permanent mode has ever been denied them, and the farce of leaving Canton officially at the end of every shipping season, and returning to it at the beginning of the next, used to be enacted every year under the Company's monopoly, though it has now fallen into disuse, not however without a struggle on the part of the Chinese Government who, during the last year, repeatedly ordered several of our leading merchants to leave Canton, for no other ostensible reason but, that they had been too long in the country. Jealousy and fear entertained by a Government but half assured of the affections and loyalty of a conquered nation were probably the principal causes that rendered it desirous to prevent collision with foreign nations as much as possible, and hence no doubt sprung this affectation of looking upon foreigners as objects of compassion only, whom the mercy of the son of Heaven only suffered during his pleasure to stay within his dominions. Hence also proceeded, to prevent any permanent settlement of foreigners, the prohibition against bringing their wives with them, and ladies from foreign countries have hitherto beenobliged to remain at Macao separated from their husbands, whose business detained them at Canton. It is well known that during the Company's time, and not many years ago, attempts were made to set at defiance this prohibition, and that a few English Ladies in consequence resided at the Factories in Canton. The clamour raised by the Chinese authorities was however so great that the Company's officers were obliged to give up the point, and no foreign ladies have since come to Canton, though within the present season we hear that a few have been bold enough to brave the discourtesy of the Chinese, and to have lived sometime at board ship at Whampoa, without any opposition on the part of the Mandarins, who thought best probably to ignore the circumstance.

We shall after these remarks begin our chapter of grievances, numbering them to prevent confusion, as we shall probably have to make some observations as we go on.

1. British merchants are liable to be sent away according to the pleasure of the Chinese Government, without sufficient cause being assigned.
2. During their stay in Canton they are debarred from the society of their families, no foreign ladies being allowed to reside in Canton.

The same jealousy which has in theory limited the stay of merchants in Canton to one season only, with a view, as alleged to prevent their becoming too well acquainted with the country and the people living in it, has also restricted their personal liberty, and according to the letter of imperial orders, they are not to move out of his house unaccompanied by a linguist or hong-merchant. This restraint has, if ever it was enforced, long been done away with, though there is little doubt that a strict espionage, whenever such shall be thought desirable, may be exercised over them, all their house-hold servants being under the patronage of the Hong-merchants and linguists. This we will not however insist on as an evil, since it again insures us against thieving and robbery, for which, the servants failing to pay, the above mentioned parties are responsible. The foreigner in Canton by law ought not to walk to a greater distance from his factory than the two China streets (streets close to the residences of the foreigners, occupied by shopkeepers) and the hongs of the Security merchants. In any other part of the suburbs he is not allowed to "stroll or loiter." This prohibition is now disregarded, and the Chinese are pretty well accustomed to see us walking every where, nor do we meet with greater annoyance than an occasional "fan kwae" [a foreign devil] from a half grinning half frightened urchin, who may happen to cross our pass. The city of Canton itself remains inaccessible, nor can we venture into the country without the apprehension of insult, since the Chinese authorities, in case of any outrage committed upon a foreigner either on the other side of the water or at any great distance from the Factories, will not protect him or punish the aggressor, on the plea that the foreigner had no business there. It is true that in spite of these disadvantages, there are many who venture on distant walks, nor is it less so that they are, owing to the mildness of the character of the Chinese, rarely insulted or robbed, though both have happened, when no satisfaction could be obtained, we therefore arrive at grievance

3. Which is, the restraint on personal liberty, foreigners being prohibited from taking healthful exercise, for which their habitations are too confined.

The trade with Canton necessarily collects together a great number of foreigners, particularly seamen, and quarrels with the natives cannot always be avoided, of which at times homicide has been the consequence. In former times, whenever such unfortunate accident happened, the Chinese insisted upon the person having committed the homicide to be delivered over to them, and threatened with stoppage of trade and even violence to the persons of the Company's supracargoes. The Chinese have always whenever one of their people was killed by a foreigner, demanded life for life, however little guilt attended the homicide, whilst their own laws acknowledge several degrees of guilt, which according to circumstances is punished with death, the bamboo, or a pecuniary fine. On several occasions foreigners have committed the mistake of giving up to the Chinese, sailors supposed guilty of having caused the death of a Chinese, under promise, it is true that the affair should be investigated; but, faithless to their word, the men thus given up have been immediately executed, probably without a hearing, certainly without impartial investigation. Fortunately, since the opening of the free-trade no such accident has happened, and we have no means therefore of knowing how the Chinese would act now, not having a responsible chief of the British to look to. But we doubt little that they would insist on the delivery of the culprit, and the trade may, by such an unfortunate occurrence, be subjected to great difficulty. This therefore is grievance

4. That in case of homicide the foreigners have not the benefit of the law in force among the Chinese, but that they are punished according to an oppressive law made expressly for, and enacted only against, foreigners.

These are the chief personal grievances we have to complain of, but those affecting the trade are much more numerous. We have already stated that the privilege formerly enjoyed of trading with several ports has little by little been restricted, and that the trade is now confined to Canton alone, where it is subject to a great many illegal exactions, and where it can only be carried on through a body of men called security merchants, a lucus a non lucendo, for security in our times they afford none being mostly poor and in debt. At the same time almost all the merchandize landed, whether purchased by them or not, comes under their controul, foreigners having no warehouses to allow of having their property in their own hands. We shall therefore continue our chapter of grievances.

5. The trade being confined to Canton alone, instead of permission being given to trade at all the ports of the Empire.
6. The Monopoly of the Co-hong, as exercising an, undue control over the foreign trade, rendering it at the same time unsafe from the insolvent state of many of the Hong-merchants.
7. The undue interference of the Government with these Hong merchants, who, being appointed by the former to transact foreign trade, ought not to be subject to arbitrary fines and punishment, which render them frequently unable to do justice to their foreign creditors.
8. The foreign merchant having no control over his own property, after its having been landed.
9. Foreign merchants not being allowed to build warehouses to store their property, which not only at present is completely under the control of the Chinese, but is in considerable danger from fire, the warehouses of the Hong-merchants being in the most crowded parts of the suburbs, but on their southern sides, so that any fire breaking out during the winter, the northwind carrying it to the southward, endangers their safety.
10. Foreigners have no control over merchandise shipped from China, this being done through the Hong-merchants and their servants, and the property exposed to all sorts of malpractices.
11. We have no fixed tariff of duties, which latter are generally paid by the Hong chants, except in case where foreigners wish to take their goods to their own premises, when the latter pay the duties according to the best bargain they can make with the linguists.

Having now given a sketch of the difficulties we have to contend with, and of the privations we suffer, we shall in another paper lay before our readers the objections the Chinese are likely to make to the removal of the causes of our complaints, and whether they are justified in withholding from foreign merchants that intercourse now generally established between civilised nations.

The arrival of the Orixa, from Liverpool, 5th September, has put us in possession of London papers to the 4th September from which we have made some extracts, chiefly relating to Spanish and Portuguese affairs. The Queen's Government in Spain seems to be fast losing ground, to the advantage of the Carlist party to whom parties of the Christinos were daily deserting. Portugal was again considered to be on the eve of a bloody revolution.

In England the election had on the whole been more favorable to the tories, than was expected, whilst in Ireland the liberals have not lost a single vote. The majority of liberals over conservatives in the ensuing Parliament is estimated at 24, somewhat less than it was during the last session.

The English papers are filled with praises of their young Queen, whose court has already been visited by a good many Royal and other noble personages among whom were the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King of Wirtemberg, &c. &c. The Duc de Nemours had also visited England, but only, it appears, in consequence of a bet with his father Louis Philippe, that he would visit Ascot races, and be back in Paris so hours after having left it.—The young Prince has won his bet by several hours.

It was said that some time this year the Queen and the Duchess of Kent would visit most of the English Counties as well as Scotland and Ireland.

The Duchess of St. Albans is dead, leaving her immense fortune to Miss. Burdett.

The French Government had, it was said, decided on a new expedition against Constantine, to wipe away the military disgrace attending the first.

It is said that the British Government has actually appointed a judge to Canton and that this appointment has been given to a Mr. Bell, a barrister, who may shortly be expected out.

As to commercial affairs, these seemed to be generally improving. There was more activity in commerce and manufactures, and money was plentiful. Cons. 91¼, @ ¾. Prices of both Tea and Silk had improved, and Canton Bohea had risen to 9 @ 9½d. per lb. and Tsatlee Silk of the very best quality had sold as high as 26s per lb., chiefly owing to speculation. It was confidently expected that the three American Agency houses would be able to pay in full all demands on them.

From the Chinese Repository for January.

On the 30th of October, 1837, a supplementary memorial was laid before the emperor, from Chung Tseang, lieut-governor of Fuhkeen, respecting Le Chungke, a military officer belonging to his majesty's forces stationed on the Pescadores, between Formosa and the main. During the 8th month of last year, Le went to Formosa; and having obtained a party of soldiers, embarked with them in a merchantman for Panghoo (the Pescadores). After a long time, his non arrival induced his superior, colonel Yen Kungheen, to report the case to the lieut-governor of Fuhkeen. On the receipt of the information, his excellency caused diligent search to be made along the whole coast of his province. At length, he ascertained, that Le's father had received a letter from his son, informing him of his being at Singapore, and stating that, while on his passage to Panghoo, during the night of the 8th of the 10th month, a violent storm arose, and carried away the masts and rudder, with seven of the soldiers. On the 6th of the 12th month, a foreign vessel took them from the wreck, and conveyed them to Sinagpore. The people there, seeing that he was an officer of the celestial dynasty, treated him with politeness, and promised that he should be returned to his own country by the earliest opportunity. This account of Le, the lieut-governor says, was well attested. He deemed it right, therefore, to command that Le should be sent back to Canton, and from thence to Fuhkeen. He also sent a communication to the authorities in Canton, that they might make inquiry among the foreign chiefs there and communicate to them the requisite instructions for their obedience; and, on the arrival of the shipwrecked officer, take all proper and lawful measures in his behalf, and duly report thereon.

An insurrection of barbarians in Szechuen has been reported by the governor of that province, who had succeeded in "annihilating" the insurgents. Of these there were two parties—one called e'fe, "barbarian bandits," the other gay e' wild barbarians."

The copper mines in Yunnan and Kweichow are suffering a deficit, resulting from impure ore and other causes, amounting in value to 11,597 taels. The persons, who are responsible to government for this sum, and who ought to pay the same, are, according to the report made to the emperor by the governor of the province, either reduced to utter poverty, or have absconded, so that no part of the deficit is recoverable: his majesty, therefore, is requested by Elepoo, governor of the province, to cancel the debt.

The gods of the Yellow River, for their recent interposition in restoring its waters, have been presented with ten sticks of incense from the emperor, who has given orders to one of his ministers, the governor of Leang Keang, to offer the same with becoming formalities. Some local officers were also to be rewarded, for their assistance.

The currency of Kwangse, the brass cash, the common coin of the empire, has so fallen in price that the lieut.-governor of the province has requested, and obtained permission to stop the coinage, until its value rises, when he is again to report, that the operations of the mint may be resumed.

Chungling. This aged statesman, at the commencement of this year, was declared by the emperor to be in good health, "retaining his energies in full force." He has since been sick; and on the 30th of October, his majesty favored him with a visit in person.

Hengan, about the same time, was appointed chief examiner of the students in Mantchou. Others were appointed to examine the translator in Mongol.

A notorious robber, Tsang Akeen, was executed in Canton, on the 14th instant. A reward of $5000 was offered, some months ago, for the seizure of this man, e which was at length effected by a brave lieutenant, E Hwaepun, a quondam pugilist. The robber had his trial, sentence, and execution, all in the same hour.

Kwo, the new commander-in-chief of the provincial land forces, arrived here on the 6th instant, from Peking; and entered immediately on his duties.

A census of Canton has been taken during the month; its object and result we have not been able to ascertain. It seems to have been an extra proceeding, having been taken out of the ordinary season, and by persons appointed especially for the occasion.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

Our quotations shew little or no variation in any articles, the past week having been a general Chinese holyday, and the customhouse closed. although the arrival of the Orixa from Liverpool with dates of 5th September, and bringing accounts of an improvement in trade generally, and a revival of commercial confidence, has created considerable excitement in this market, and caused an advance in Teas and Raw Silk, which two articles appear to have more particularly benefited by the change.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—No sales reported, but prices are not likely to be so firm in cousequence of the importations ₱. Denison and Copeland being brought into the market, and the arrival of the Orixa with a considerable supply of grey and white cloths. COTTON YARN, has not yet recovered from it's depression, the dealers purchasing nothing, but endeavouring to work off their own accumulation of stocks bought at high prices some months since, and held on for the chance of improvement.

WOOLLENS.—SPANISH STRIPES, are without alteration. LONGELLS, notwithstanding the short importations, do not advance. CAMLETS, English and Dutch, both very low, and little demand.

COCHINEAL —continues very depressed, and in no demand.

METALS.—LEAD, would sell at our quotation of $ 6½. IRON, is rather dull, except for small nailrod, which is more enquired for.

RICE.—without alteration in price or demand.

COTTON.—The brokers have not yet made their appearance, and nothing is therefore doing. The stock is estimated at about

Bombay,	Bengal,	Madras,	Total.
28,000	10,000	8,000	46,000 bales,

not including the Golconda's, announced yesterday from Bombay.

OPIUM.—We have heard of no transactions during the week, except the deliveries from the small passage boats at Whampoa, the extent of which we believe to be limited.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—Since the Orixa's arrival a purchase of fine silk has been reported to us at 470, and of middling Cargo at 430, which shows an advance of from 15 @ 20 $ per Picul. There is no more fine in the market, nor any increase to our stock, but a supyly of 2000 bales is shortly expected. Exports this season up to this date, 1360 bales.

TEA.—The exports up to this date, induding the Argyle's cargo, have in this season been, Congo. Piculs 95,567. Caper. 1842. Souchong 3221, Campoe 217, Ankoi, 102. Hongmuey, 1,009, Pekoe, 1,992 Orange Pekoe, 1,119; Total 105,069 Piculs of black teas; of green, Hyson, 800, Young Hyson, 836, Hyson Skin, 104, Twankay, 9,115, Gunpowder, 617, Imperial, 289; Total of green Teas, 11,761. Piculs. Grand Total of teas hitherto shipped, 15,577, 333 lbs Considerable excitement was occasioned in the tea-market by receipt of the intelligence of the advance of prices in England. Twankays, of which the middling and good qualities had been previously selling at from 16 @ 18, rose rapidly, and 20 Taels has been paid for many of very indifferent quality. Of the good, few if any remain in the market. Congous also experienced an improvement, but as the stock is considerable, and the tonnage here limited, it is not likely that the advance demanded, and in some instances submitted to, can be maintained.

FREIGHT.—Most of the tonnage in the port has been engaged, and perhaps an advance on the hitherto current rate of 5 $ per ton could be obtained.

OPHTHALMIC HOSPITAL.

The following extract from the Chinese Repository for January last. will inform our readers of the extent of the benefits conferred upon the Chinese population by this truly beneficent and admirable establishment. It will be seen that in not more than two years 4575 patients have been treated, and most of them have been dismissed either entirely cured or at least with their sufferings alleviated. The expenses of the Establishment, it will be seen, are very moderate. compared to its activity, and we are glad to be informed that the Chinese begin to understand the value of this institution, and to support it by pecuniary contributions, the Hong-merchant Howqua having set the example by a donation of $3 00. It is an undertaking which reflects the highest honor on the Revd. Doctor Parker, and which cannot fail to meet here as well as elsewhere with the support it so well merits

ART. VI. Ophthalmic Hospital at Canton: Seventh Report, being that for the term ending on the 31*st of December*, 1837. By the Rev. PETER PARKER, M. D.

"Two years of this institution are now completed. During this period 4575 patients have been received. 1725 of whom have been admitted during the last term. Besides these, a number of old patients have been treated, who had relapses, or new diseases. This report includes the period from the 4th of May to the 31st of December, of which two months were spent in a voyage to Japan, and subsequently illness caused a suspension of the operations of the hospital for another month It was reopened on the 1st of October, when it appeared, that a considerable number of patients who had come a long distance, had taken up their residence in the city, and had waited, some a fortnight, and others a month or more, for the opening of the hospital.

The expenses for the current year are $1, 692. 24, viz:

For native assistants - - - - - -	$341 21
For medicines, instruments, &c. - -	543-33
For board, fuel, &c. - - - - - -	261 80
For repairs - - - - - - - - -	45.99
For rent - - - - - - - - - -	500.00
	$1,692 24

N.B. The donations to the hospital are included in the acknowledgments of the contemplated Medical Missionary Society, whose organization, unanticipated causes have delayed.

"Here I close the review of the institution, during its two years existence. Of the 4575 patients that have been received, many are remembered, as well as their deep solicitude, and that of their friends as they have waited to know their prospects, and their joy when they have been relieved. The recollection of hundreds that will never more see light, has revived the sorrowful sensation previously felt. They were too late. Some of the latter class were just entering upon life; they were in perfect health, but, for the want of timely assistance, the orb of light has been to them early and totally extinguished. There is some mitigation, however, in the reflection, that, whilst various surgical operations have been performed, through the divine blessing, save have proved fatal; that many young persons have been saved from a life of blindness, and that others have regained the vision actually and (without some kind interposition) forever lost. It has often been delightful to witness parents again enjoying the sight of their children, whose prattlings and blooming countenances had never more greeted their eyes, had not the cataract been thrust aside. From many, those protuberances and incumbrances, which rendered their possessors monsters, and life a burden, have been successfully removed. The cancer, threatening its victim with death has been once and again extirpated from a mother's bosom. The misplaced, and in some instances, large reservoirs of useless and cumbersome fluid, have been dried up, and health smiled upon the previously despondent sister and parent. To these results, the friends and benefactors, who have so promptly sustained the institution, are referred as their best reward, whilst the most grateful acknowledgments are tendered them, in behalf of the thousands whom their charity has benefitted. Especially thanks are due to the medical gentlemen, who have repeatedly, and so cheerfully, lent their important aid, particularly to Messrs. R. H. Cox, and A. Anderson, who have continued their valuable assistance each week upon the day devoted to operations. And also to William Jardine, esq., who, notwithstanding he has long ceased from practice, retains all his former profession, and even in the pressure of business in one of the largest commercial houses in Canton, has ever found leisure to attend to the calls of suffering humanity. Facts are constantly occurring, which show the increasing confidence of the Chinese in foreign surgery, and the widening extent to which the knowledge of the operations has spread. As illustrative of the former, Howqua, the senior hong merchant, has presented $300 to the institution; and in proof of the latter, numbers have come journeys of several weeks to avail themselves of its benefit. A district magistrate from the province of Hoopih, in the interior of China, has come a journey of six weeks to be treated for blindness, and is now an inmate of the hospital.

The importance of training young men for the medical profession in China. was early felt, and I am happy to state, that three youths, of good promise, of the ages of 16, 17, and 19 years, are now connected with the hospital. They have already made respectable proficiency in the English language, and are of valuable assistance in compounding medicines and administering the prescriptions. The eldest is a responsible and active youth, and besides his tuition, receives $5 per month wages. Some minor operations upon the eye, as for entropin and pterygium, he has dexterously performed: he has served now more than a year. The second is the farthest advanced of the three, in his own language, having been designed for a literary life, till the death of his father (who held office in government), more than a year since, deprived him of the means of pursuing his studies. He is partly sustained by the Morrison Education Society. The third, who is a young man of good talent, is wholly supported by his father, and is to remain at least five years.

I cannot close this report, without adverting to another circumstance, not the least interesting to those who have at heart the best welfare of this empire. I refer to the opportunities constantly presented of exhibiting the spirit and principles of our most holy religion, of frequently pointing out to them the consequences of vice, and of making them acquainted with the true God, And these advantages will increase, as our knowledge of their language and religion increases, and as we are advanced in their confidence and obligation."

BURMAH.

We have letters from Akyab and Khyook Phyoo. Notwithstanding the belligerent predictions of sundry of the editorial fraternity, the King of Ava continues very well behaved and all is at peace. At Akyab sickness had disappeared from the comp. We give an extract from the Khyook Phyoo letter:

"Khyook Phyoo, Nov. 25 1837. — I have the pleasure to inform you that all is at peace in this district, and for the present likely to remain so. though this were doubtless the first point of attack when the rupture is made This place is situated most advantageously for a successful attack It is only about two tides distant from the celebrated Aeng Pass, by which all the Burmese merchants pass to Ava, which is only about a fortnight's march for the Burmese troops. Other towns of importance are much nearer, one especially, only about 4 marches. So that in 10 or 12, say 15 days at the most, a party of 3 or 6,000 men might be marched upon our Arracan territory. At present the means of defence is very inefficient: the regulars being scattered at Akyab, Khyook Phyoo, Sandoway, as well as being much broken by sickness, renders them almost inefficient for repelling any considerable or sudden attack. The local corps of Mugs is under efficient training, and promises to be a very excellent corps. The Mugs. I should think, will, if well led on, prove formidable opponents to the Burmese; the dislike they bear to the Burmese will secure their fidelity, but the government should have a regiment of regulars ready to be despatched by steam to this district on the first intimation of a movement towards the frontiers †; for one regiment headed by some officers will repel a host of boasting Burmans. It is important that this should receive the prompt attention of government, for Arracan is dear to the court of Ava. It is so both on political and religious grounds. It was the appanage to the heir apparent of the Burmese crown, and is deemed the most holy section of the whole empire, and therefore will be one of the points of attack. Of the warlike intentions of the present party there can be no doubt; but it is equally evident that the war is unpopular with the people, and is especially urged on by court favorites. Nor is this the chief cause of hindrance. The present King must feel his own throne secure before he hazards a war — he has generally been looked upon as the friend of the heir apparent, nor has he as yet thrown off the disguise; if he should he may meet with what will check his designs, or an untimely death. If you can consult the evidence given at the close of the late war by Judson, and others, you will see most clearly what are the views of the present treaty in reference to the British, and all the treaties by which they are bound. The most singular feature in that evidence is the utter disregard they have for our treaties, and the prophetic idea connected with the present heir apparent, viz. that he should subdue all the kala nations meaning the natives of India. including the British. The intention is evidently war, the Burman government only wait for the sinews or the time, which, if it should be in the rains, will be awfully ruinous and terrible. but whenever it does come, and wherever it breaks out, it must be met with promptness and courage, Let them associate the seven stockades of Rangoon and the routing of an army at the commencement of a new campaign, and they will be dispirited. which is half a conquest. The rumours brought by the merchants are, that the king of Ava has sent embassies to China and to a large tract of country to the east of Burmese inhabited by Cochin Chinese, or some other independant tribe of warlike pretensions, making liberal offers if they will combine to conquer the British, and drive them out of India. These may be but rumours. but a feather shows which way the wind blows, and there may be more in the insolence of China &c. at this moment than appears on the surface. The desperate hill tribes are favorable to the British, and have only to be negotiated with to render them most formidable opponents to the Burmans. The chief subjects which should occupy the attention of Government at this moment is to defend the mountain passes, and have ready an efficient force to repel an attack which may be made to morrow, or may be deferred until next year as may best suit the purpose of the golden footed barbarian.— The Englishman, 9th Dec.

By the schooner Mary, from Rangoon the 13th ult., we have advices from that place to the 20th. Every thing was then quiet—but the Rangoon people, it is said, expect a war, and the lower class there, wish one. By the last accounts from Ava, the daughter of the Usurper was about to be married to the son of the deposed King—an event which all the Burmans anxiously desire may take place, as they believe it will please the English government. The Usurper has, it appears, within the last few months gradually disarmed his subjects, excepting his own army, leaving an allowance of only a very few muskets to each town, or village, and he thus had accumulated an immense stand of arms at Ava. Fire-arms were therefore not saleable—the King having fully supplied himself, and the people being afraid to purchase them, lest they should again be deprived of them by the government.

The same advices also mention that the Danes had broken up their settlement at the Nicobars and withdrawn all their people, having hired the English schooner HERE to assist in effecting their removal, which took place towards the end of October. The natives of the island were ignorant of the cause which induced the Danes to abandon their settlement.

A Maulmain Chronicle of the 11th Novr. was forwarded to us from Rangoon, from which we have no space to make extracts for our present number.

The Peyn Boun, from this port, arrived at Rangoon on the 17th ult. having touched at the Car Nicobar and Maulmain on the way.

The H. C. Steamer Diana had arrived at Rangoon on the 20th ult., from Maulmain

The Robert Spankie was to leave Rangoon soon after the Mary for the Straits. —Sing. Free Press 21st December.

SINGAPORE.

About a fortnight ago, a party of Malays. seven in number, who had gone to the back part of the island to fell timber, were returning on a raft composed of the spars they had procured, and to which 2 sampans were attached, when they were attacked by a small piratical boat off Pesserris, a village situated a mile or two beyond the Red Cliffs, and three of them killed. The pirates on their first approach, called out for some tobacco, and being told that there was none to give, discharged several blunderbusses at the raft, killing two of the men who were on it. The remaining five took to the sampans which were in tow, four of them going into one. and only one man into the other. They were instantly pursued by the pirates, who speedily overtook the sampan with only one man in it, and dispatched him with krisses, notwithstanding his earnest supplications for mercy, which were heard by his companions in the other boat. The latter made all haste towards the shore, which they fortunately reached before the pirates could overtake them. when they abandoned their sampan and sought safety in the jungle. Two bags of rice was all the poor people had with them—and was all that these rovers less ruffians obtained for so much b oodshed. It appears that just before firing, some one on board of the pirate boat called out, "Don't you know this is Pangalima Pasang?"—the name of a reprobate Gallong chief of some notoriety, but which was on this occasion no doubt used as a mere blind, as a known pirate is not generally so ready to proc aim himself—and besides, the voice of the speaker is known to the four who have survived, although from it being in the night time, his person was not recognised. We hope this circumstance may yet lead to the detection of the perpetrators of this atrocity—which in the mean time shews the propriety of having the local gun-boats constantly on the watch—and may possibly suggest to the government the necessity there exists for having a police station somewhere out in the direction where it occurred.

NORTH AMERICA.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

The Packet ship, which sailed from New York on the 8th September, brought the message of President Van Buren to both Houses of Congress, delivered at their opening for the session extraordinary on the previous day. The document is of enormous length, as usual, but its features are easily condensed. Having referred to the late monetary difficulties, the President explains his reasons for calling Congress together before the usual time:—"I was also led to apprehend that the suspension of specie payments, increasing the embarrassments before existing in the pecuniary affairs of the country, would so far diminish the public revenue, that the accruing receipts into the Treasury would not, with the reserved 5,000,000 be sufficient to defray the unavoidable expenses of the government until the usual period for the meeting of Congress; whilst the authority to call upon the states for a portion of the sums deposited with them was too restricted to enable the department to realize a sufficient amount from that source. These apprehensions have been justified by subsequent results, which render it certain that this deficiency will occur, if additional means be not provided by Congress." He then expresses regret but not surprise at finding politics mingled with the questions of currency, credit, and commerce, and proceeds to explain his own views of the late difficulty. He attributes the distress to over-trading caused by an excessive issue of paper-money and the consequent easy means of obtaining it. "The consequences of this redundancy of credit, and of the spirit of reckless speculation engendered by it, were a foreign debt contracted by our citizens, estimated in March last at more than 30,000,000 dollars; the extension to traders in the interior of our country of credits for supplies, greatly beyond the wants of the people; the investment of 39,500,000 dollars in unproductive public lands, in the years 1835 and 1836, whilst in the preceding year the sales amounted to only 4, 500,000 dollars; the creation of debts to an almost countless amount, for real estate in existing or anticipated cities and villages, equally unproductive, and at prices now seen to have been greatly disproportionate to their real value; the expenditure of immense sums in improvements, which in many cases have been found to be ruinously improvident; the diversion to other pursuits of much of the labour that should have been applied to agriculture, thereby contributing to the expenditure of large sums in the importation of grain from Europe—an expenditure which, amounting in 1834 to about 250,000, was in the first two quarters of the present year increased to more than 2,000,000. dollars; and finally, without enumerating other injurious results, the rapid growth among all classes, and especially in our great commercial towns, of luxurious habits, founded too often on merely fanciful wealth, and detrimental alike to the industry, the resources and the morals of our people."

The revulsion in England in 1826 was produced, he says, by the same cause. "The most material difference between the results in the two countries has only been that with us there has also occurred an extensive derangement in the fiscal affairs of the federal and state governments, occasioned by the suspension of specie payments by the banks. He then describes the means of remedy. "They are to regulate by law the safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public monies; to designate the funds to be received and paid by the government; to enable the Treasury to meet promptly every demand upon it; to prescribe the terms of indulgence, and the mode of settlement to be adopted, as well in collecting from individuals the revenue that has accrued, as in withdrawing it from former depositories, and to devise and adopt such further measures within the constitutional competency of Congress as will be best calculated to revive the enterprise and to promote the prosperity of the country." He cannot recommend the establishment of a national bank. When the States had such an institution, it did not prevent similar disaster The Bank of England did not prevent them. Besides, the interference of government in such matters was only urged by those who wished to extend to a dangerous degree the power of the executive. It had no right to regulate the money transactions of the citizens. The question regarded the means of credit now existing. Good bills representing bona fide property were necessary to trade, but there was a species which merely created fictitious capital. "These bills have formed for the last few years a large proportion of what are termed the domestic exchanges of the country, serving as the means of usurious profit, and constituting the most unsafe and precarious paper in circulation. This species of traffic, instead of being upheld, ought to the discountenanced by the government and the people."

"In transferring its funds from place to place, the government is on the same footing with the private citizen, and may resort to the same legal means. I may do so through the medium of bills drawn by itself or purchased from others, and in these operations it may, in a manner undoubtedly constitutional and legitimate, facilitate and assist exchanges of individuals founded on real transactions of trade. The extent to which this may be done, and the best means of effecting it, are entitled to the fullest consideration. This has been bestowed by the secretary of the Treasury, and his views will be submitted to you in his report. A system founded on private interest, enterprise, and competition, without the aid of the legislative grants or regulations by law, would rapidly prosper; it would be free from the influence of political agitation, and extend the same exemption to trade itself; and it would put an end to those complaints of neglect, partiality, injustice, and oppression, which are the unavoidable results of interference by the govern, ment in the proper concerns of individuals.". He objects also to the old system of connecting government with the local banks, which was only necessary when the nation began to exist, and was surrounded by difficulties.

"We have no emergencies that make banks necessary to aid the wants of the Treasury; we have no load of national debt to provide for, and we have on actual deposit a large surplus. No public interest, therefore now requires the renewal of a connexion that circumstances have dissolved. The complete organization of our government, the abundance of our resources, the general harmony which prevails between the different states and with foreign powers—all enable us now to select the system most consistent with the constitution, and most conducive to the public welfare. It is true that such an agency (as local banks) is in many respects convenient to the Treasury, but it is not indispensable. A limitation of the expenses of the government to its actual wants, and of the revenue to those expenses with convenient means for its prompt application to the purposes for which it was raised, are the objects which we should seek to accomplish. The collection, safe keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public money can, it is believed, be well managed by officers of the government. Surely banks are not more able than the government to secure the money in their possession against accident, violence, or fraud. The assertion that they are so must assume that a vault in a bank is stronger than a vault in the Treasury, and that directors, cashiers, and clerks, not selected by the government, nor under its controul are more worthy of confidence than officers selected from the people, and responsible to the government—officers bound by official oaths and bonds for a faithful performance of their duties, and constantly subject to the supervision of Congress. It is for Congress, and ultimately for the people, to decide whether the benefits to be derived from keeping out fiscal concerns apart, and severing the connexion which has hitherto existed between the government and banks, offer sufficient advantage to justify the necessary expenses. If the object to be accomplished is deemed important to the future welfare of the country, I cannot allow myself to believe that the addition to the public expenditure, of comparatively so small an amount as will be necessary to effect it, will be objected to by the people. With these views I leave to Congress the measures necessary to regulate in the present emergency the safe keeping and tranafer of the public monies. In the performance of constitutional duty, I have stated to them without reserve the result of my own reflections. The subject is of great importance, and one on which we can scarcely expect to be as united in sentiment as we are in interest. It deserves a full and free discussion, and cannot fail to be benefitted by a dispassionate comparison of opinions."

The deficit of the year he states at 6,000.000 dollars, and allowing 4.000,000 to lie dormant, the whole amount would be 10 000,000 of dollars But he says, "It is not proposed to procure the required amount by loans or increased taxation. There are now in the Treasury 9.367,214 dollars directed by the act of the 23d of June. 1836, to be deposited with the States in October next. This sum, if so deposited, will be subject, under the law, to be recalled, if needed, to defray existing appropriations; and as it is now evident that the whole, or the principal part of it, will be wanted for that purpose, it appears most proper that the deposits should be withheld. Until the amount can be collected from the banks, Treasury notes may be temporarily issued to be gradually redeemed as it is received. The plan proposed will be adequate to all our fiscal operations during the remainder of the year. Should it be adopted, the Treasury aided by the ample resources of the country, will be able to discharge punctually every pecuniary obligation For the future all that is needed will be that caution and forbearance in appropriations which the diminution of the revenue requires, and which the complete accomplishment or great forwardness of many expensive national undertakings renders equally consistent with prudence and patriotic liberality.

"I deeply regret that events have occurred which require me to ask your consideration of such serious topics. I could have wished that in making my first communication to the assembled representatives of my country, I had nothing to dwell upon but the history of her unalloyed prosperity. Since it is otherwise, we can only feel more deeply the responsibility of the respective trusts that have been confided to us, and under the pressure of difficulties unite in invoking the guidance of the Ruler of Nations, and in labouring with zealous resolution to overcome the difficulties by which we are environed.

"I is, under such circumstances, a high gratification to know, by long experience, that we act for a people to whom the truth, however unpromising, can always be spoken with safety; for the trial of whose patriotism no emergency is too severe, and who are sure never to desert a public functionary honestly labouring for the public good. I seems just that they should receive, without delay, any aid in their embarrassments which your deliberations can afford. Coming directly from the midst of them, and knowing the course of events in every section of our country, from you may best be learned as well the extent and nature of those embarrassments as the most desirable measure of relief.

"I am aware, however, that it is not proper to detain you at present longer than may be demanded by the special objects for which you are convened. To them, therefore, I have confined my communication, and, believing it will not be your wish to extend your deliberations beyond them. I reserve till the usual period of your annual meeting that general information on the state of the union which the constitution requires me to give.

"M. VAN BUREN."

Washington, Sept. 4th 1837.

"Private letters state that the cholera is making dreadful ravages in Central America; in some villages two-thirds of the inhabitants have been carried off. In Salvador 1,500 persons have died, and at Tongunts upwards of 1,200. The Indians, in some places, under the belief that the President had caused the waters of the rivers to be poisoned, have murdered many of the inhabitants, alleging also that the President intended to give the country up to the English. — Courier.

SPAIN.

A sum of 500,000 francs (20,000£) in gold "ounces" was forwarded from Bayonne to the Carlist head-quarters on the 18th.

In Catalonia a new spirit was excited De Meer's resignation was accepted, Santos Miguel was named captain general, Nav arot second in command, and Cambronero political chief of Barcelona; Brigadier Puig remains governor of the city, and De Meer obeys orders in an inferior capacity.

The news from the north of Spain is disastrous. The prisoners, English and Spanish, taken in the church of Andoain, were butchered by the Carlists in cold blood, the peasantry having been roused to incontrollable fury by the burning of a hundred farms on the previous day.

The English artillery have abandoned Fontarabia to the keeping of the Queen's troops, and the Carlists will very soon take possession of that place and Irun. It is rumoured that the English at Hernani, disgusted by the revolting murder of their comrades at Andoain, threatened reprisals on the Carlist prisoners taken at Irun. We hope, however, that all Englishmen will be speedily withdrawn from these disgraceful and demoralizing conflicts.

M. Villiers, in his dispatches to the English minister at Paris, says that Carlos showed no intention of encountering the Queen's troops The following Carlist letter from Guadalaxara, under date of the 16th ult, may throw a little more light on the Pretender's views; — "Don Carlos was then fortifying Salinas, a strong position in the neighbourhood of Madrid, and erecting other intrenchments on the banks of the Tagus. In case of a reverse in the former position the army will fall back on the latter, and if again forced in the second line, will retire into the mountains of Soria, where it may defy all the efforts of the Christonis. E-partero, according to this letter, had concentrated about 18,000 men near the capital, and the Carlist force opposed to him amounted to between 17,000 and 20,000." In the estimate of the Queen's army were not included the national guard and garrison of Madrid, nor the divisions of Oraa and Lorenzo, which had been ordered to join the general-in-chief. The plan of the Carlists is to reduce the capital by famine, and for that purpose they have detached to the south of it Palillos and another guerilla chief, who are intructed to lay waste the whole country, and cut off as much as possible all supplies of provisions from Madrid. When Don Carlos shall have completed the works of this double line of fortification, he will march in person on Toledo with 10,000 men, and will, in all probability, render himself master of the town without striking a blow, as, once he is in possession of the aqueduct which supplies it with water, the inhabitants will be completely at his mercy, and must open to him their gates."

By advices from Madrid, of the 20th ult., it appears that the army of Espartero were so fatigued with their long march to save the capital, and in such a state of destitution, that they could not leave till the 17th, when, being clothed anew, paid up, rested, and refreshed, they marched from Madrid, leaving 3,000 only to guard the capital. Lorenzo was marching to join Espartero, and Oraa was said to have completed his junction with him.

Carlos was investing Guadalaxara, but raised the siege on the appearance of Espartero, who came to its relief on the 18th ult., and remained there on 19th, on which day he pursued the enemy to Ranera.

The people of Madrid were meanwhile rallying out in parties to restore the stone of the constitution, overthrown by the Carlists, and the Cortes were, as usual, discussing "innocent trifles."

Col. Wylde was at Espartero's head quarters, Col. de Lacy was at Saragossa on a secret mission from England, and English officers ware assisting the Christinos of St. Sebastian to repair the fortifications of Ametzagara against any attack of the Carlists.

The functions of Zariategui, in the present position of the Carlist forces, are thus defined—He was to occupy Valladolid, which he had entered on the preceding day, and to march thence on Segovia When master of those two cities, he was to make a powerful diversion, in order to oblige Espartero to divide his forces, to intercept the principal road to the north, to keep his communications open with the junta of San Leonardo, and to organize the insurrection of Old Castile.

ENGLAND.

October 5th from the Calcutta Paper.

Capt. Buck, in H. M. Ship Terror has reached Londonderry from the North Seas. It is not probable that any new discoveries can have been made as the vessel was locked up in ice from August 1837 and has returned a more wreck with three chain cables round her bottom to keep her together. Capt. Buck states that for two months past no person on board had the least hope of again seeing their native country. Judging from Capt. Back's letter to the Geographical society it is indeed miraculous to think how ship or crew escaped. The Terror being unable to reach her destination the commander was compelled to winter in an open field of ice tossed about at the mercy of winds and tides, in which situation all on board were attacked with scurvy, but only three cases were fatal. Since her arrival it has been found necessary to beach the ship to prevent her sinking at her anchors.

FOREIGN.—In Portugal there was a conflict between Terceira and Bomfin on the 28th ult.; the accounts received are vague, but there is no doubt the affair concluded unfavorably to the former.

FOREIGN.—In Spain the Queen's troops under O'Donnell have sustained a complete defeat near Hernani. It appears that the Spanish troops behaved with the greatest cowardice and left the British Legion to be cut to pieces.

The loss sustained by the British Legion was killed one Colonel, two Majors, five Captains, four Lieutenants, and 110 rank and file—A number of prisoners have been taken.

30th Sept.—We have to-day accounts from America to the 9th. In the commencement of the Session the Van Buren party in the House of Representation succeeded in electing their speaker by a majority of 16. The President's message principally alludes to the currency system of the States, and appears to have obtained but little favour at either side of the Atlantic, its views not being calculated to aid the American merchant in liquidating the debt due to England.

Private letters mention that the next Steam Mail was to be dispatched from London on the 28th October, and that the Company were sending out a new Steamer, the Semiramis, which was to sail on the 5th November for St. Helena, the Cape, Mauritius and Bombay; and that they were about to purchase four other Steamers for India.

The commercial news is more gratifying than was expected. One letter mentions that all the American bills will be paid as they fall due—those on Wildes, Wiggin, &c. We have seen a letter of the 5th October which speaks more in detail of the American houses, quoting advices from New York to the 8th of September, and which says that most of the houses of consequence there were found ready to take up their bills as soon as they were returned—that bills on Thomas Wilson and Co. to a large amount were taken up daily in London; the writer adding with respect to the firm of Wildes and Co., his full belief that "all will go straight."

The Duke of Nemours has left Paris for Africa to join the Constantine expedition.

The French fleet has reached Tunis, and taken its station in the harbour, to forbid the approach of the Turkish fleet, respecting the movements of which nothing has been heard since its departure from Constantinople.

General O'Donnel made last week an advance from Eruani with some 4000 to 5000 Spanish troops, and the New British Legion On the 13th the Legion, deserted by the Spaniards, and attacked by an overwhelming Carlist force, was almost destroyed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

SHOALS IN THE FALAWAN PASSAGE.

Sir.—Well knowing your laudable wish and endeavors to make public the position of any new dangers, I hasten to give you the earliest information of the situation of some Coral banks or Shoals in the China Sea hitherto unknown.

By insertion in your very highly esteemed publication you will oblige a constant reader.

I am, Sir,
Your very Obedient Servant,
I. H. BROWN.
Commander of Ship "Arabian."

Canton, 1st February, 1838.

On the 8th January 1838, on our passage to China by the Palawan, standing to the Northd., wind N. E. at 10 30. A. M. past close to windward of a coral patch with apparently 5 or 6 fathoms over it, blowing fresh and a good deal of sea, could not lower a boat to determine. It lay in 10° 30′ N Long. 116° 39′ E.

Same day, laying up East, larbd. tacks, at 3. 30. P. M. came suddenly into shoal water, saw the coral rocks very distinctly under the ship's bottom, over hove the lead, first cast had 5 fathoms and mark 5 above water a few casts, put the helm up and ran to the southward a few minutes until we gradually deepened 30 faths. and no bottom.

We appeared to be on the southern edge of an extensive coral flat extending N. E. and N. W. of us some miles. By sights for chronometer, taken immediately we came off the shoal; this part of it lays in Long. 116°58′ E., or 4′ east of the Bombay reef which we left yesterday; Lat. 10° 35′ N in which we observed at noon, having made a due East course.

The following day, 9th, at 9 A. M., standing to the northward with a fresh wind from N. E. and a heavy head sea, came again into shoal water; coral rocks seen very close to our keel, but before we had the lead forward, past over the ridge into 28 fathoms. I must here observe that the look out at the mast head was in both cases very bad, being never announced, although from experience I know coral shoals can be seen from the masthead at a good distance when the sun is astern, which was the case in these instances. From 9. to 11, 30. A. M. ran 8 miles on a N. N. W. course, in irregular coral soundings, least water by the lead 11 faths but at times we apparently had much less from the proximity of the coral rocks.

We entered upon this flat in Lat 10° 39′ N. Long. 117° 22′ E. came off in Lat. 10° 46′, Long. 117° 17′. The longitude computed from a series of sights, before and after noon, the latitude by a good meridian altitude from four observations, clear weather;—in passing over this bank the water appeared very shoal east and west of us, running in ridges in that direction.

January 11th, at 6 P M., standing to the eastd. came again into shoal water; saw the black rocks under the bottom. We were at this time in long. 118° 50′ E., by sights taken an hour and a half before. Lat. 11° 7′ N. The bearings taken a short time previous: the table land on Palawan, S. E. by E. ¼ E Northernmost land, E. by N. ½ N., and not less than 30 miles off the nearest land Tacked and stood off; least water by the lead 13 faths, deepening suddenly to 50 and 100 faths,—no bottom. This lays farther out than any of the patches found by Capt. Ross. I am confident as to the above position being correct, corroborating the Lat. by stars on both sides of the meridian.

By reference to the chart, a line struck through the centre of the Sea-horse bank, W. by S. ½ S., and E. by N. ½ N., cuts the centre of each of the above shoals or banks.

I must here observe that I made all the principal reefs on the west side of the channel as regularly as mile stones, and, as far as my abilities and good watches can determine, they are correctly laid down.

But the Viper shoals do not exist as breakers in the position assigned them on the charts, as we were on the site of each at clear noonday.

Neither does the Pensylvania, as breakers, laid down N. by W. 20 miles from the Bombay reef, as I crossed its position very close and directly from the above reef.—It is to be regretted that those numerous Pensylvanias are not specified as shoals or breakers, as it not unlikely that the first coral patch seen by us was one of the said shoals, but they had always been represented to me as breakers, and as such I kept looking for them.

J. H. BROWN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CANTON PRESS,

Dear Sir,—The enclosed is from taken the Bengal Hurkaru, and may interest your Readers.

X.

6th February 1838.

A correspondent of the Englishman has asked with affected simplicity, and has been echoed by the high-minded Editor of that paper, "cui bono" to give a rupee to Mr. Waghorn for the trouble of expediting letters to London, when they are dispatched, it is insinuated, as quickly and as safely by the public mail? Now the insinuation is utterly unwarranted; and our belief is, and the Englishman knew it was so when he readily chimed in with it with probably no more sensible motive than wishing to deprive an industrious and obliging servant of the public of this trifling compensation for his trouble. The Government packets by the Hugh Lindsay did not arrive in London for 10 or 12 days after those directed specially to Mr Waghorn's care; and the reason assigned by that gentleman is sufficiently clear to satisfy the unprejudiced mind of the superior facilities he is enabled to afford to the transmission of letters, viz; that the Agent for the Post Office is compelled to keep the public packets for the Government Steamers; so that supposing a mail to arrive the day after the departure of the latter, it must be detained until the next month: but Mr. Waghorn can forward the letters addressed to his care by the French Steamers, and Marseilles. In some cases a period of three weeks may be thus saved. But perhaps our envious cotemporary's bile has been agitated by his supposing we touched commission for our services, and as he is now at every thing in the ring from "Tiffin to pine cheses" he may be disposed to covet a slice thereof. We assure him we act "gratis, for nothing," and if we thought he would do the same, and that Mr. Waghorn's rupees would be safe in his keeping, we should not hesitate to indulge him with the management of our London Post Office department, which necessarily involves some time and work, elsewhere given however to a gentleman, whose services in the cause of steam are so highly came as those of Mr. Waghorn. It would be idle in us to point out the important consequences to commercial correspondence in particular, of a saving of even six or seven days. The thing speaks for itself.

CANTON PRESS,

10th February, 1838.

We have this week devoted nearly the whole of our columns to extracts from the Calcutta and Singapore papers, received by the Waterwitch, from Calcutta 13th December, where the Bombay dawk with the October overland despatches had arrived on the 6th December. Upon the whole the papers do not contain much news of stirring interest, except that matters in Spain and Portugal appear still very far from a satisfactory settlement. In Spain Don Carlos seems to prosper, and he has even made a demonstration upon Madrid, whence he has however withdrawn again, it being supposed that his forces were not strong enough to attempt the Capital. The British Legion had suffered a defeat near Hernani, and was nearly cut up, having been, as is reported, deserted by the Christino troops in the moment of danger.

In England Commercial affairs looked brighter, the bank had reduced it's discount to 4 per cent per annum, and there was a good demand for produce generally, at advanced prices. Fine Twelve Silk is quoted at 20 @ 21s, and we copy below prices of teas as quoted on the 30th September in London, The American President's speech of which we give a long abstract (the uncurtailed document itself would occupy the whole of our paper) seems, to judge from the paper we have perused, to have given little satisfaction in England, nor has it been well received in the United States. It is thought that the scheme of changing specie for paper circulation, which, Mr. van Buren advocates, will find very little support. We do not yet know how this message has been received by Congress, where the former speaker, Mr. Polk (belonging to Mr. van Buren's party) has been elected by a majority of 113, over 108. The two political parties seem therefore to be pretty well marshed.

In our paper of 21st October we published a Bill for the establishing of a Court or Courts of Justice in China. This bill, brought in by Lord Palmerston and Sir John. C. Hobhouse, made no further progress in the old parliament, and can therefore not become law before the next meeting of Parliament, (in assemble on the 15th November,) In a correct copy of this bill, which has been politely sent to us, we observe some additions to the bill as published by us, which are that such Court of Justice may be established likewise within three leagues of the coasts of the Chinese Empire, and it's jurisdiction is to extend over acts committed within a hundred miles of the said coast.

From the Calcutta papers we find that the Dutch Prince Royal, Henry, had arrived at that Presidency, and that much attention and hospitality was being shown to him A ball and dinner were given to him at the Townhall, and he was likewise present at the Dinner of the Scots on Saint Andrew's day. Dwarkanauth sagore also gave a splendid entertainment in honor of his Royal Highness, who has since proceeded to Benares.

We are sorry to see from the same papers that the plague was reported again to have broken out in Palee.

We are obliged to Capt. Brown for his account of the Shoal in the Palawan passge, which will be found in another column, as will likewise the letter of X. pointing out the advantages of forwarding letters, care of Mr. Waghorn, instead of sending them by the Post-Office direct, advantages which well deserve notice.

Since the Sale of the 11th September, at which our dealers bought very freely, and took off nearly five-sixths of the quantity offered, we have not had nor could we have expected to have had demand in the Market.

The clearances are brisk, and the Country Traders buy fairly.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

Business has only yet been partially resumed, and in the absence of actual transactions, we give generally the same quotations as in the previous week, but as the holydays were over yesterday, more activity in the markets may be expected, but without, we fear, much improvement in prices of articles for import.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS are the only articles that continue to maintain a steady demand at fair prices. Several small parcels have been disposed of lately both of white and grey at previous prices. COTTON YARN on the contrary continues almost as depressed as ever. There has been a little enquiry for the best quality and Nos. 24 @ 36, and one or two small lots have been sold at about 43$, but for other descriptions, and assortments Nos. 20 @ 30 the offers are only 34 @ 40, according to quality and numbers, the higher being most wanted.

WOOLLENS.—Quotations of SPANISH STRIPES continue at 1.20 @ 1.35 according to quality, and some sales have been lately made at these rates, and as both Tea and Raw Silk are in such active demand, some improvement in the demand for Woollens is expected, although no great encouragement is held out for an advance, in price. LONGELLS, scarlets, have experienced a further advance, and may now be quoted at upwards of 11 $, the stock being very short. Assorted colors remain nearly as before at 9¼ @ 9½ other colors having receded, particularly black and green. CAMLETS, English of good quality and assortment are dull at 38$, duty paid, and Dutch 34$.

METALS.—There have been no transactions for two or three weeks, and we hear of no alteration in price or demand for any of the articles.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—No alteration has been reported to us in any of the articles.

RICE,—without any change.

COTTON.—The stock of all descriptions is, for the season of the year, but small, consisting of Bombay, 36,000; Bengal, 10.000; Madras, 8,000; Total 54.000 bales, but a decline in the prices current before the Chinese New Year is expected, most of the previous purchases in January remaining on hand, and we hear T. 10. spoken of as the price for best Madras and Bengal Cotton.

OPIUM.—The arrival of the Waterwitch with nearly 1,200 Chests of Patna and Benares has tended still more to depress the market, and Patna cannot now be quoted at more than 520 @ 530 and quite nominal, and Benares is without enquiry at 460 @ 470; Malwa has been sold at $ 400, and, we believe, even lower. Turkey Opium is nearly unsaleable at any price. No alteration has taken place in measures of the Government, nor have we lately heard any reports on the subject. The deliveries are meanwhile going on very slowly, both outside and in the River. On the East coast, we understand, the Mandarins are again becoming troublesome. For deliveries at Lintin during the last month, see above.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—The English overland mail of the 1st October bringing a confirmation of the previous advance in price, has caused a corresponding demand here for fine silk, but the market is at present quited bare of this description, although some is shortly expected. For middling quality, which, in the beginning of the season, sold at 400, we hear 450 $ are now asked.

TEA.—The demand owing to the favorable advices from England has continued, and great activity has prevailed in our tea market during the week. Twankays continue at our last weeks quotation, and Skins and Young Hyson are dearer than before.

FREIGHTS.—The late favorable accounts of the tea market in England have caused a great demand for tonnage and as high as £ 7.—has been paid for the advantage of immediate shipment, but as several ships are expected, this rate cannot be maintained.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

Business has only yet been partially resumed, and in the absence of actual transactions, we give generally the same quotations as in the previous week, but as the holydays were over yesterday, more activity in the markets may be expected, but without, we fear, much improvement in prices of articles for import.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS are the only articles that continue to maintain a steady demand at fair prices. Several small parcels have been disposed of lately both of white and grey at previous prices. COTTON YARN on the contrary continues almost as depressed as ever. There has been a little enquiry for the best quality and Nos. 20 @ 38, and one or two small lots have been sold at about 43$, but for other descriptions, and assortments Nos. 20 @ 30 the offers are only 34 @ 40, according to quality and numbers, the higher being most wanted.

WOOLLENS.—Quotations of SPANISH STRIPES continue at 1.20 @ 1.35 according to quality, and some sales have been lately made at these rates, and as both Teas and Raw Silk are in such active demand, some improvement in the demand for Woollens is expected, although no great encouragement is held out for an advance, in price. LONGELLS, scarlets, have experienced a further advance and may now be quoted at upwards of 11 $, the stock being very short. Assorted colors remain nearly as before at 9½ @ 9¾ other colors having receded, particularly black and green. CAMLETS, English of good quality and assortment are dull at 58$, duty paid, and Dutch 34$.

METALS.—There have been no transactions for two or three weeks, and we hear of no alteration in price or demand for any of the articles.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—No alteration has been reported to us in any of the articles.

RICE.—without any change.

COTTON.—The stock of all descriptions is, for the season of the year, but small, consisting of Bombay, 36,000; Bengal, 10,000; Madras, 8,000; Total 54,000 bales, but a decline in the prices current before the Chinese New Year is expected, most of the previous purchases in January remaining on hand, and we hear T. 10. spoken of as the price for best Madras and Bengal Cotton.

OPIUM.—The arrival of the Waterwitch with nearly 1,200 Chests of Patna and Benares has tended still more to depress the market, and Patna cannot now be quoted at more than 520 @ 530 and quite nominal, and Benares is without enquiry at 460 @ 470; Malwa has been sold at $ 400, and, we believe, even lower. Turkey Opium is nearly unsaleable at any price. No alteration has taken place in measures of the Government, nor have we lately heard any reports on the subject. The deliveries are meanwhile going on very slowly, both outside and in the River. On the East coast, we understand, the Mandarins are again becoming troublesome. For deliveries at Lintin during the last month, see above.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—The English overland mail of the 1st October bringing a confirmation of the previous advance in price, has caused a corresponding demand here for fine silk, but the market is at present quite bare of this description, although some is shortly expected. For middling quality, which, in the beginning of the season, sold at 400, we hear 450 $ are now asked.

TEA.—The demand owing to the favorable advices from England has continued, and great activity has prevailed in our tea market during the week. Twankays continue at our last weeks quotation, and Skins and Young Hyson are dearer than before.

FREIGHTS.—The late favorable accounts of the tea market in England have caused a great demand for tonnage and as high as £ 7.—has been paid for the advantage of immediate shipment, but as several ships are expected, this rate cannot be maintained.

VOL. 3d. No. 24. CANTON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY, 17TH, 1838. No. 128.

From the Indo Chinese Gleaner.

YUH-KUH said—"But why doubt of rising to the rank of Te-ko? In the world, the man who purposes to himself the attainment of property, worth a thousand pieces of gold, (while at the same time he stedfastly addheres to the use of proper means) it is determined that he shall become possessed of a thousand pieces of gold. He who purposes the attainment of property, equal to an hundred pieces of gold—it is determined that he shall obtain it; and the man who (folding his arms in sloth) will suffer himself to die of hunger—it is determined that he shall die of hunger. Heaven suffers things to take their own course; leaving men to the natural results of their own conduct, without adding so much as the down of a plant thereto.

With respect to having sons also—he who lays up virtues, for an hundred generations—it is determined that he shall have sons and grand-sons, for an hundred ages, to protect him. He who lays up virtues for ten generations—it is determined that he shall have sons and grand-sons, for ten generations, to protect him. He who lays up virtues for three, or for two generations—it is determined that he shall have sons and grand-sons, for three or for two generations, to protect him.* He whose life is cut off without leaving posterity—his virtues assuredly are few in the extreme! Seeing you know your errors, you ought to take your former unlucky doings, and labor with your whole strength to change them for the better. Lay up a store of virtuous actions. Learn to exercise forbearance. Cherish the spirit of peace and love. Be sparing of the productive energies of the body. Nourish well the animal spirits. View all your past transactions as if they had died yesterday. Consider all your future pursuits as if to day alive before your eyes: this is the true doctrine of righteousness, the true regeneration of the body.† And even allowing that the body of flesh and blood were originally subject to the controul of Fate, yet, most certainly, the body, regenerated by righteousness, will work upon heaven (to change it.) The kea says—"If heaven create evil, man may counter-work it. If man himself create evil, he cannot live." KUNG calculated that you should not attain the rank of Tsiuen-tsze, not have a son. These are evils of heaven's creating—and may be counter-worked. If you can now expand virtuous tempers, do good with energy, and lay up a selfacquired happiness. Why not accept and enjoy it? The YIH-KING says—"The proper policy for the good man is to make haste towards that which is felicitous, and recede from that which is infelicitous." But, if it be said, that the decrees of heaven are unchangeable, how could he make haste towards that which is felicitous, or recede from that which is infelicitous? In the first section (of the YIH-KING,) the doctrine commences by saying—"The family that lays up treasures of goodness, will have super-abounding prosperity; but the family which treasures up wickedness, will have superabounding wretchedness."—Does your faith come up to this point?"

I was astonished at these words, made my obeisance, and received instruction. I accordingly wrote out a penitential paper, in which, by a true confession, I manifested forth the sins of my former life before (the god) FUH. I first prayed that I might be successful in my literary pursuits, and then vowed to perform three thousand acts of goodness, in order to remunerate the favors of heaven and earth, and of my ancestors. YUH-KUH then drew out, for my admonition, a register of conduct,‡ in one column of which my merits were to be written down, and in the other, my errors; in order, that my daily actions might be preserved on record. The good actions to be carried to my credit—and the evil ones to be scored out in proportion as the good increased. He also taught me to repeat prayers to CHIN-TSZE,§ for the accomplishment of these things.

The epithet by which I was originally designated was HEO HAE.‖ That day, however, I changed it to LEAOU-YIN, that I was now awakened to the importance of laying (by my own conduct) the foundation of a good destiny; and wished to avoid the pit and mortar into which the vulgar fall. From that time forward, I feared; and my feelings were no longer the same as in former days. Formerly, I indulged a vicious apathy, and let every thing take its own course; but now, trembling awe and dread possessed me. Even in a dark chamber, or secret corner of the house, I feared to sin against heaven, earth, and the gods. When I met with persons who hated and reproached me, I tried to bear it with patience.

In the year following, which was the seventh of the cycle, the tribunal of punishments held the examination of those who had attained the literary degree called KEU-JIN. Kung had calculated that I should rank the third in order of the successful candidates; but I was the first on the list—and his words were not fulfilled. At the harvest examination of the same year, I was also successful. Still my righteousness was not unmixedly pure. On examining myself, errors still appeared to be numerous. Either when I saw what was good, I did not instantly set about doing it courageously; or when helping others, my mind still continued in a state of suspicious hesitation. Sometimes, when exerting the members of my body to the utmost in doing good, my mouth yet erred in words; so that on carefully balancing my daily errors and merits together, they were barely equal. I had gained no surplus which could be carried to my credit.

In the sixteenth year of the cycle, when the three thousand acts of goodness, which I had formerly vowed, were now, after the lapse of ten years, nearly completed, the thought of praying for a son next arose in my mind; and I again vowed to perform three thousand acts of goodness more. Accordingly, in the eighteenth year of the cycle, (my son) YUEN was born. Whatever action I myself performed, I recorded it with the pencil; but as (my wife) YU-SHE could not write, she cut off the end of a goose quill, and, dipping it in vermilion, made a red point for every action she performed, in the daily register. Sometimes in one day she would have upwards of ten points of this kind.

In the twentieth year of the cycle, in the eighth moon, the three thousand acts of goodness being all performed, the thought of praying for the rank of a TSIN-SZE, began next to stir in my breast; and, to ensure success, I vowed to perform ten thousand acts of goodness. In the twenty third year of the cycle, I gained the wished for eminence, and was appointed to the office of CHE-HEEN,¶ in the district of PAOU-TE. I then made a new blank register of conduct, which I called CHE-SIN P'HEEN, (i. e. a book for the regulation of the heart) that I might record therein the whole of my actions, good and bad, without sufferingso much as an hair's breadth to slip. In the evening, I prepared a table in the hall, and, in imitation of CHAOU-HWUH TAOU, burnt incense, and reported to the Sovereign (of heaven.) That same night, in a dream, I beheld a spiritual being, to whom I mentioned how extremely hard it would be for me to complete the number of good actions concerning which I had vowed. The spirit said—"curtail your exactions on the people. This one thing will be equal to the completion of the ten thousand." At the time the land revenue of the district of PAOU-TE was 2-10ths, 3-100 ths, and 7-1000ths, of a tael per acre. I immediately set to work, and was successful in reducing it to 1-10th, 4-100ths, and 6-1000ths. Just when I had effected this, NEW-YU†† master of religious repose, came from WOU-SHIH hill. I told him the dream, and asked whether I ought to believe it or not. The priest answered—"With a virtuous mind, and perfect integrity of motive, to perform one single act may be equivalent to the performance of ten thousand; how much more in such an act as this, wherein, by lessening the duties of a whole district, tens of thousands of the people receive happiness!"

The teacher, KUNG, had calculated that in my fifty-third year, I should meet with the inconquerable evil (death;) but that year I had no illness: and I am now in the sixty-eighth year of my age.

JAPAN

From the Chinese Repository for January.

ART. I. Nautical observations, made by captain David Ingersoll, during the voyage of the Morrison to Lewchew and Japan, in July and August, 1837.

SHOULD I again visit Lewchew, or Japan, I would proceed by the Formosa channel, as the current, during the S. W. monsoon, generally runs to N.E. 1½ knots, (whereas in the Bashee passage I had some western current), and probably better winds prevail there than south of Formosa. Near the Lewchew islands, the tides ran N. N.E. and S. S W.1½ or 2 knots, during the last quarter of the moon; but in Jeddo and Kagosima bays little or none was perceptible; while the rise and fall was about 18 inches. Near Tanegasima and Jakunosima they ran S E. and N. W. 12 hours, each way½ knot, moon full.

By reference to the table, all I know about the currents may be seen; the most in one day was 79 miles northeastward.

The S. E. part of the Island of Typinsan I made in 125° 21' E. Horsburgh has it in 125° 36' E. My chronometers made Nagakiang Roads in 127° 36' 30" E., agreeing with Hall's survey. When at anchor there, with Capstan Rock S. 75° E., Abbey Point S. 48° W., I found two spots of coral rocks, about 20 feet in diameter, with 6 and 7 feet water over them, not more than 40 fathoms in shore, or to S. by E. of us: the water looks brown over them. In longitude 128° 43' E., latitude 27° 20' N., there is a small high island, probably Wukido, laid down in 128° 23' E. In lon. 129° 56' E., lat. 28° 6' N., is a low, level island, about three miles long, not laid down.

Cape Tootomy Japan, laid down in 138° 19' E., I made in 138° 14' E. The western part of Ysou promontory, laid down in 138° 49' E., I made in 138° 41' E. Off Cape Ysou, about 1½ a mile, is a small quoin or wedge shaped rock; S. E. from this are two others; the outer one, being quite an island, is about 2½ or 3 miles from Cape Ysou, and in a line with the south part of Osima or Vulcano island, bearing N. 75° E., 12 or 14 miles—between which there are no dangers, and from thence to Jeddo bay there are no invisible dangers,—so I was informed by the Japanese on board, some of whom had been 20 voyages along this route. Here the current ran strong to N.N.E., at least 3 knots. The above mentioned outer rock is in 138° 49' 30" E. Ysou promontory has on its S.W. part a remarkable white spot, near the water, about 200 feet in diameter, also a sharp couical rock.

From our Japanese I learned, there are no dangers in the outer part of Jeddo bay, until a mile or two above Ouragawa harbor, which is on the western side. We beat up, the wind blowing strong, and part of the time very thick weather from side to side, but saw no dangers more than ½ mile off shore. Cape Sagami, the western side of the entrance, I made in latitude 35° 10' N., longitude 139° 33' E. It bears from the point, forming the eastern part of the entrance, N. N. W., about 9 miles; close in with it, say 100 yards, there are 11 fathoms, rocky bottom, but here the bottom appeared very uneven. A ledge above water runs to S. W. ½ mile; farther to northward and westward, than where I stood in, about 1½ miles to westward of this ledge, is an island, forming, between it and the main, a bad harbor, with a village on the main, to northward. Squally, blowing fresh, and thick at intervals. I had not much opportunity for observation or sounding. Running in for an anchorage the western side of the bay, going quick, first cast gave 20, and as fast as the lead could be hove we had 18, 13, 12, 9, and 8 fathoms, when I anchored: the bottom, very uneven coral. The anchorage was in the N. W. of a small bay, making westward about 1½ miles deep, the points bearing N. N. W. and S. S. W.; it may be 5 miles between them. Two rocks above water bore W. S. W.½ mile, which appeared connected with a ledge under water that ran round to N. N. E., and not more than 100 yards from the ship; this we discovered from the breakers during the night, a heavy swell rolling in after midnight: when we anchored it was quite smooth. The anchor did not appear to have any hold, as it came up without an extra heave and clean. There appears to be no good anchorage about here, and what may be, is exposed to shot, being so close in; ours was about a mile off shore, 3 miles below Ouragawa harbor, which our Japanese say is a fine laudlocked place, with 6 or 7 fathoms all over it. Off this harbor there is a small flat rock, about the size of a ship's hull, but not so high, it may be ½ the distance across the bay, which is here about 5 miles in width. Jeddo bay above, spreads out to a width of 20 miles, filled up with quicksands and rocks, so that only small junks can get up to the city, through a most intricate and winding channel, about a mile wide,—so said our Japanese. On the heights above Ouragawa there appeared to be some strong batteries of heavy cannon as the shot came at least 1½ mile.

In running down the coast to Kagosima bay, the barometer was low for some days; 29.55 was generally the blowing point; but there was no bad weather, only a lack of wind. Krusenstern mentions the same circumstance. Cape D'Anville, or Kiusiu, I made in 131° 19' E.

The entrance to Kagosima bay cannot well be mistaken, from Mount Horner, which forms the S. W. point, being a very remarkable, conical, regular mountain, from the sea to the peak. I made its longitude 130° 22' E. From the south point of Kiusiu, (or Cape Tschitatagon of the Russians,) up 16 or 18 miles, the eastern part of the bay is clear, as I went up on that side as far as the first village, which is hidden by a cliff until bearing about E. S. E. Our anchorage was on the western side, about 5 miles N. E. of Mount Horner, in a small bay ½ of a mile deep, the points bearing N. E. by E. and S. W. by W. about 3 miles apart, village on a kind of shelf at the bottom of the bay N. W. by N. The bottom was hard coarse black sand, like cannon powder, poor for holding. The depth, 100 yards from beach 4 fathoms, deepening gradually to 18, 2½ miles off. We anchored in 7, with the above bearings, exposed from S. S. E. to S. W. by W., and from S. S. E. to E.; the land was from 10 to 12 miles distant. During our stay here, it was cloudy squally weather, so that no observations were obtained. The wind was light, except in squalls from southward, bringing in a large swell. After getting out, the ship was drifted within one mile of the N.E. part of Jakunosima island, where are 5½ fathoms mud. Southerly winds prevailed on this part of the coast, probably the tail of the S. W. monsoon; easterly about Jeddo. Across Kagosima bay, the sounding are 50 fathoms mud. There are about the bay several conical, perforated rocks, through which the water flows.

I made the centre of the north part of Tanegasima in longitude 131° 9' E., but was unable to determine the latitudes of most of the points mentioned; as near as I could judge, they are laid down correctly on Krusenstern's chart. Volcano island has, running from its N. E. part, a ledge or reefs, (some above others breaking the water,) that extends ½ the distance to St. Julie island, which may be 9½ miles from it to N. E.; one of these looks like a junk under sail. From the S. W. part of the island there is also a cluster of rocks, (about 100 yards in diameter, breakers and all,) about 1½ mile distant with green water between them. In a deep ravine, on the east side of Vulcano island, yellow smoke ascended from three points, enveloping its summit. S. E. from St. Clair there is a haycock (high but small) shaped rock or island, about 5 miles distant; when bearing westward it forms one cock, when bearing north two.

In latitude 30° 60' N., long. 129° 27' E., is a cluster of pointed high rocks or islands, not mentioned by former navigators, but being so near the track to Nagasaki the Dutch have, probably, their position.

On 19th August, in latitude 30° 33' N., longitude 125° 19' E., sounded in 34 fathoms mud; for two days previous the water had looked like soundings. Same soundings continued until in latitude 29° 28' N., longitude 122° 50' E., when a breeze from N. E. was too valuable to be lost in sounding. I have but little doubt that soundings extend from the Chinese coast nearly to Japan's southern part.

From latitude 28° to 24° a space of 4 days, the barometer was down to 29.60 and 33, which low state induced me to down top gallant yards and masts, as by all old traders, or generally in the China sea, 29.50 is considered a signal to make all snug, in typhoon season. Until this time, and that on the coast of Japan, I have never known the barometer down to 29.50 without a gale. In June, returning to China from Java, the barometer fell to 29.50 and 40; I prepared for a gale, which followed soon, and lasted 26 hours; this was in latitude 15° N., near the Paracels.

FRENCH JOINT STOCK BANK.

The successful operation in England of the principle of joint stock banking has recently led to its adoption upon a grand scale in France. The proprietor of this new establishment is M. Laffitte, who having successfully closed his own affairs, recovering completely from the disasters of 1830, has turned his attention to this plan of embracing, by a large banking association, all those industrial interests that do not come within the design of the National Bank, and from which it is precluded by law. The capital of the Joint Stock Bank is fixed at fifty millions of francs, about 2,000,000£, with the power of increasing it two hundred and fifty millions. The paid-up capital is small, amounting to only fifteen millions of francs. M. Laffitte wisely proves his zeal upon the principle of sustaining the establishment by its own credit, and deriving its profits from the extent and validity of its transactions, which is the safest course for a bank that does not issue its own notes. He proceeds upon the plan of refusing credits or loans without guarantee; but proposes to open accounts current, giving three per cent interest on deposits, which will no doubt draw ample support around him, as the Bank of France allows no interest on deposits; and the credits of its accounts current are estimated at 50,000,000 francs. The business will chiefly consist of discounts, and will be on well known commercial value—bills of small retailers (a new and important feature in the banking operations of France)—certified invoices due from three to six months after date—the negociation of values on the departments, and foreign bills—the purchase and sale by commission of public funds, and shares in public companies—the recovery of contract payments from the government, of arrears of dividends, salaries, and pensions—and of payments from the Bank of France. The association will not issue notes, but it will put into circulation small bank bills, similar to our post bills, which, it is anticipated, will be found so useful to the community at large as to obtain extensively throughout the departments; and as it is intended to render these convertible into money on demand in Paris, and at all the branches throughout the provinces, it is not unlikely that they may ultimately supersede the less convenient circulation of the national establishment.

This project is watched with intense interest in France. It promises well for the numerous classes who were hitherto so little benefitted by the operations of the national bank, and its objects are, on the whole, more useful in detail than those which the financial system of the country has hitherto contemplated. M. Laffitte's confidence in its success may be inferred from the fact that he is himself a shareholder to the amount of 7,500,000 francs, nearly 300,000£.

REV. JOHN MARSHMAN.

Pious, learned, prescvering, the entire energies of Dr. Marshman's active life were devoted, under God, to the service of his fellow creatures. India is indebted to him, for having sought to extend to her the blessings of knowledge, and for successfully endeavouring to arouse the spirit of her children from the humiliating condition to which her destinies had reduced them. England owes him her gratitude, for sacrificing time and fortune to the prosecution of her noblest desire in regard to her Eastern Colonies; and the whole Christian world,—from the example of his meritorious and useful life. Memory dwells with fondness on the qualities of such a man—pious without bigotry or affectation; learned without pedantry—generous without ostentation—humane, disinterested, patient, and indulgent we looked on Dr. Marshman as exhibiting in himself all those high attributes which essentially belong to a purely christian character. That he was not exempt from the common failings of his kind it is but natural to suppose; but these, when † "BODY," i. e. the person, the man.

‡ Register of conduct. This is called KUNG-KWO-KIH, a table of merits and demerits. It is the same with the table formed by the celebrated Dr. Franklin of America, for recording his good and evil actions; but known in China hundreds of years before the discovery of America. This Heathen, and that Philosopher, seem to have kept an account current with the deity!

§ CHIN-TSZE; a certain deity, generally represented with many hands.

‖ In China, for persons, four different terms are applied, which may be expressed by such words as—a surname, a name, an epithet, and a designation. The first, they inherit, whithout change, down from the first person who was ever so called, like the clans in the Highlands of Scotland. The second, is given by the parents soon after birth. The third, imposed, most generally, by their teachers. And the fourth, given by parents or friends when the man comes of age, or when he marries, or at some important period of his life. They affect to select words for these purposes, which convey some important ideas. This man's designation was HEO HAE, which, in this case, may be rendered "RESEMBLING, OR IMITATING THE OCEAN." It had most likely been given to him, to intimate that expansion of mind—that greatness of character, which his friends hoped he might attain to. But, he seems himself rather to consider it as expressing, very aptly, the disturbed and restless state of his mind, while under the grating faith of a stern irrevocable fate. Happily freed from these erroneous conceptions, he assumes to himself a new designation—viz. LEAOU-FAN, i. e. "DONE WITH COMMON THINGS," to intimate, that he had now completely given up those ideas of destiny which have such power over vulgar minds.

¶ CHE-HEEN is the name given to the chief magistrate of those districts called HEEN. It is highly significant—and may be thus rendered:—one who "KNOWS"—"THE DISTRICT;" as if to teach him how important an intimate knowledge of the affairs of that division of the country, over which he is placed, is to the right discharge of his office. The district next above a HEEN, in point of extent, is called FOO; and its chief magistrate, CHE-FOO, i. e. "ONE WHO KNOWS THE FOO." The next district, still large, is called CHOW; and its chief magistrate, CHE-CHOW, i. e. "ONE WHO KNOWS THE CHOW."

 From this it would seem, that the governors of districts had it in their power to lighten the duties of the people, when they considered them too heavy. Perhaps they were obliged to furnish a certain sum to government, from the districts over which they presided, and were allowed to make the best of the market they could; and the "CURTAILING OF HIS EXACTIONS," may refer to what was over and above the revenue fixed by government.

†† YEW-YU, i. e. "FRIGHTENED BY A SPECTRE."—It was assumed as the epithet of this Master of Repose, who resided in the WOOSHIH, OR "FIVE INNER APARTMENTS"—expressions, all intended, very likely, to convey some mystic sense.

We cannot doubt but that of a life so blameless, so exemplary, and so useful, many will come forward to render it that justice, to which our feeble pen is confessedly inadequate.—Daily News, Dec. 7.

There have been very serious riots in Palermo and the Viceroy has been barbarously massacred by the populace. In 25 days no less than 27,000 persons fell victims to the Cholera in that City. The Cholera also produced serious disturbances in other parts of Italy so as to compel the most vigorous efforts of the authorities to repress the discontent which manifested itself. This frightful disease has made great ravages at Rome also, and many of the higher classes have fallen. The mob in this latter City has committed great excesses and several individuals have been sacrificed to its fury, amongst others a young Englishman having been regarded as a poisoner was on the 15th August cruelly murdered.

At Berlin the outbreaking of the Cholera has also produced great consternation.—The Calcutta Corier 6 December.

BRITISH AND CHINESE INTERCOURSE.

In our last paper on this subject we laid before our readers the nature the complaints of foreigners have against the treatment they receive from the Chinese, and we now propose to ourselves to investigate what right the Chinese have to follow such policy, and what means we may employ as most likely to bring about a more satisfactory state of affairs. We may here observe that the policy of non-intercourse, with more or less restriction, has been followed by the Chinese Government ever since Europeans landed on the shores of China, and that it is only in favor of the Portuguese that this Government has at all deviated from this policy, in allowing them to settle on a sterile neck of land, where commerce alone supports them, they being dependent on the Chinese for every necessary of life. The earliest history of this settlement is involved in doubt, and Sir Andrew Ljungstedt is probably correct in ascribing it to the connivance of the Mandarins bribed by the Portuguese. The historians of the latter state that in consequence of services rendered by the Portuguese against the Pirates, the Emperor made them a present of the island of Macao, but we see no reason to put much faith in this account, the more as it but too well accords with the actions of the Mandarins of our times to allow of encroachments on the laws of the Empire if their private advantage can thereby be promoted. The attempts of the Portuguese to settle in Amoy, Ningpo and Chinchew were only momentarily successful—they were soon obliged to limit themselves to the occupation of Macao, which they now possess on the payment of an annual rent to the Emperor. The attempts the English have made, when their trade to China first assumed importance, to deal with the Chinese in their different ports, met with no better success than that of the Portuguese, and they were at last obliged to confine the emselves to Canton, under the restrictions we have already mentioned.

It is not alone the sea coasts which the Chinese watch with such jealous care against the intrusion of foreigners; their land frontiers are equally sealed against all foreign ingress, on the north at least where they touch the Russian Empire, no Russians being permitted to travel into Chinese Tartary, and only a certain number being allowed to remain a sufficient time at Peking to acquire the Chinese language, that there may be persons able to interpret should the affairs of the two Empires require it. Such however is the jealousy of the Chinese towards the Russians that, when some years ago a Russian ship came to Canton, they ordered her away again, saying that the Russians enjoyed, in being able to enter the celestial Empire by land, a privilege sufficiently great, and need therefore not come by water also.

The system of non-intercourse may therefore be considered as one of the fundamental laws of the Empire, seeing that it has been upheld ever since we have been acquainted with China, nor is it likely that it will be voluntarily relinquished by the Government. Many writers have represented the seclusion which the Chinese affect as a transgression on the law of nations, on the plea that all the inhabitants of the earth forming but one family, none have a right to withdraw themselves, but that all should be equally willing to work for the general advancement of the human society. This reasoning may hold good should a small portion of our society secede to the detriment of the greater part, when even forcible means may be taken to compel them to return. But with the Chinese it is different; their nation comprises one fourth of the inhabitants of this globe, and were they to open their country to all comers, through contact with these strangers, many of their most cherished institutions left them by their forefathers through a hundred generations, would be shaken, nor do we see that the advantages to be gained by the nations becoming by such intrusion better acquainted with China, would be at all adequate to the, at least imaginary, loss the Chinese would suffer in the derangement of their habits and institutions, should such intrusion be either forcible or without the necessary gradual preparations. Civilisation in China, from its isolation from the surrounding world, has taken a different direction from what it has done in the western world. From standing alone so long the Chinese have become incapable of appreciating any but their own laws, institutions, and manners, and though they may perhaps be brought to admire the advancement the western nations have made in all arts of civilized life, and in the science of politics, yet, if our western improvements were thrust upon them, it is likely they would feel like the prisoner of the Bastile, who, when the Revolution at last broke the bonds he had so long and even impatiently borne, and when the light of heaven again burst upon his sight, when again he beheld his fellow men, and again heard the busy hum of the multitude, felt no wish but to go back again to prison!—His long absence from the society of man had rendered him unfit for it, and he preferred the solitude to contact with mankind, whose sympathies and passions had long been dead within him. Thus will it be with the Chinese, unless they are brought to associate with other nations by imperceptible degrees, so as not too grossly to shock the prejudices and habits which thousands of years have rendered dear to them.

If, on the one hand, the peculiar genius of Chinese civilization be opposed to an amalgamation with that of the western nations, the jealousy of the Chinese Government, on the other cannot but view with dread any attempt foreign nations may make to become better acquainted with it's subjects, for however much cause these may have to cherish their own institutions, the government must be aware that they have also many causes of discontent, chiefly from the extortions practised by the mandarins, and which discontent annually breaks out in rebellion in one province or the other of the Empire, nor is it improbable that, if free intercourse with strangers were allowed, these would, for their own advancement, encourage such demonstrations of disobedience. The Chinese Government cannot but be aware of the rapid strides the English power is making in India, so as even already to press upon the frontiers of the Empire, and it is probable that the only cause of its having hitherto escaped losing any part of it's territory, has been the foreign policy the government has ever pursued, and comparing the success they have met with, to the fate of so many powerful Indian monarchies, now totally annihilated and merged in the British empire, we must not be astonished to find the Court at Peking resolved not to deviate from a line of policy which has been hitherto so eminently successful.

Under these circumstances it is not therefore likely that any diplomatic missions to Peking can be of use, nor have the many embassies hitherto sent by Portuguese, Dutch, English and Russians ever had the slightest result. What then is to be done to accomplish the so much desired object of encreased facilities of trade with China? Negotation will be unavailing; armed coercion, besides being unjust, is probably as unlikely to bring about the desired end.—On Commerce alone therefore this task devolves, and that commerce will do it in the course of time, though perhaps slowly at first, but securely, we have no doubt. Through commerce, those Chinese engaged in it, will from the frequent intercourse with foreign nations begin to sympathize with them, they will be able to draw comparisons, they will thereby become aware that they have not reached that degree of preeminence over other nations they so fondly believed; such consciousness will create emulation and give a stimulus to exertion which has hitherto lain dormant; they will seek the society of the strangers ignorance had hitherto allowed them to despise, and they will gradually assimilate themselves to their visitors. The interchange of produce and manufactures will encrease, and the occupation of trade which at the beginning was merely a source of profit to a few, will soon become necessity to the many, nor will it then be any longer in the power of the Chinese Government to annihilate an intercourse which the predilections and necessities of a great part of the nation would protect to the utmost. We have in the first of this series of papers on British and Chinese intercourse endeavored to shew how indispensably necessary the foreign trade has already become, limited as it is to one port in the Empire, to a great number of the Chinese people, then, how much greater would it's influence become were it allowed to spread over all parts of the immense Chinese coast!

To extend our trading limits ought to be the chief object of the free trade, and shrewd and active a people as the Chinese are, we are justified in supposing that such attempts will be favorably met by them, though probably opposed by the Government, in fact, the few trials hitherto made of trading voyages on the coast have invariably shewn us the people as desirous to trade, but the Government inimical to these attempts. Mandarins in China are however accessible to golden reasons, and they may be found in other ports as well as in Canton and it's vecinity to barter their trust for money. We would therefore recommend, in spite of the prohibition of the government to push the trade to the other ports of the coast, and believe that, though repulses will be occasionally experienced where the mandarins have much influence or where they are more honest than elsewhere, many of such attempts will be crowned with perfect success, and the oftener the experiment is repeated the less will the risk of failure become.

Hitherto this kind of trade to the ports in the vecinity of Canton has, with very few exceptions, been carried on exclusively in the article of Opium, and since the Opium trade at Lintin has been more than usually obstructed by the Government, a number of vessels, perhaps 15 to 20, of about 150 or 200 tons each are continually plying on the coast disposing of their Opium. The success of this trade, Though its increase and consequent influence on the population from the use of the drug, is much to be lamented, affords a singular proof of the weakness or supineness of the government, for, though during a number of years Edict after Edict has been issued against it, denouncing the heaviest penalties against the natives concerned in it, yet the introduction of the article has increased every year in quantity, nor is it probable that any measures the government may now take, will be sufficient effectually to put it down, nor will it perhaps ever cease unless the Chinese nation themselves discontinue smoking it. The immense value of the article has hitherto chiefly attracted the attention of foreign speculators, as holding out greater prospects of profit, than less valuable manufactures, which being besides, though liable to a duty, legally imported into Canton, hold out not the same temptation to the Chinese to possess themselves clandestinely of. We should think however that the attempts to introduce British manufactures into the northern ports will soon become more common, and that, if the Chinese learn that they can be regularly supplied direct, instead of obtaining these goods from Canton at an enhanced cost, they will contrive means for introducing them into the country either in spite of, or with the contrivance of the mandarins, and make the returns in the produce of their country, which finding thus a new market would soon be collected in sufficient quantities to afford a good freight to these foreign coasting vessels. By such proceedings, the Government, not to be altogether defrauded of the duties will at last be compelled to permit foreigners to trade at ports which have been hitherto shut against them, and the people will soon learn to appreciate the advantages of a direct trade.

It may be objected to our plan, that by it's execution we incite the Chinese to disobedience of their government, but laws can only be said to exist as long as they are enforced; if the government of China has not the power to prevent smuggling, others are not to be blamed for availing themselves of their weakness.

By the arrival of the Trafalgar from Liverpool the 12th of October, English papers (though no letters) to that date have been received and kindly lent to us, and we give from them the following news

The french government is about to send on envoy to Persia, to negotiate a treaty of commerce.

Distressing accounts continued still to be received of the devastations caused by the tremendous hurricane in the leeward Islands in August last.

The tea trade. Monday. The quantity of tea delivered last week was, 462,904 lb. The trade is not so firm as it was, in consequence of the large declarations for the next public sales. The East India Company's declaration amounts to 4,217,000 lbs.—Times 10th October.

Accounts from Newyork to 17th Septbr. had been received. Business was reviving, and the letters from the United States are reported to shew indication of an amelioration of the affairs of trade, and of the restoration of steady and regular communication between the two countries for the purposes of commerce as they have hitherto existed.

On the 13th Sept. Mr. Wright of the Finance Committee, reported a bill in the Senate, to authorize the Secretary of the treasury to issue treasury notes to the amount of $ 12.000 000 in sums of not less than $ 100, redeemable in the year, and to bear interest at the rate of the late deposit banks; this bill was taken up by the house on the 16th; but on the motion of Mr. Calhoun, and after a division, the yeas being 28 and the noes 18, the further consideration of the bill was postponed for two days. A bill similar to the above, without the clause of allowing interest, was brought before the house of representatives by Mr. Cambreleng. This bill had not gone through its stages, but the house had resolved to proceed with its consideration without waiting for the action of the senate Accounts of 8th Sept. had been received from New Orleans. They represent no change in the pressure of the money market since former advices, the "utmost difficulty being still experienced in raising funds on any securities whatever." Spanish doubloons 15.50. Mexican 17.50. Sovereigns 5.50 American gold 14, Eagle dollars and United States bank notes 7 per cent Premium. Cotton was in the dullest state possible. The weather continued clear and excessively hot, and considerable sickness prevailed among the uncelimatized.

Exchange in Newyork on England 16th September 19@ 20 per cent premium.

A bill had been also proposed by Mr. Wright to grant an extension of credit to bonds for duties, of 6 months from the time such bonds become due, and that this extension shall be granted on all bonds to be given for duties during the period of one year from the first day of October 1837.

The Liverpool papers have received Newyork journals to the 26th September, which are said not to contain much news of interest, the Congress still discussing the monetary propositions of Mr. President VAN BUREN. The price of specie had fallen very considerably, say 3¼ to 4 per cent within not more than 8 days, and the exchange on England had fallen in the same proportion, owing to more specie offering than was required for the demand.

Another change of ministry has taken place in Madrid, the third in this year.

Seizure of Opium. The Schooner Alpha (one of the passage boats) left Macao with 92 Chests of Opium to deliver outside to junks, when she was dogged by a chinese war junk, two fishing boats, and a boat like a fastboat in appearance which at last boarded her, she being unable to escape by sailing, the weather being calm, and took from her the whole of the Opium. We learn that the Alpha had 21 hands on board, but with the exception of a few straggling shots, no fighting for the property took place. The Opium, we hear, was only partly owned by, or paid for, by the Chinese traders, three of whom were on board the Schooner and made prisoners. The Schooner and crew were given up again after the Opium had been taken out, the Chinese being probably aware of the foolishness to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. We fear that, a commencement having thus been made by the Chinese in acting against these small craft engaged in the Opium trade, and that one so eminently successful, it will soon be followed up by other acts of aggression.

Some seizures of Opium are also said to have been made on the river here at Canton, but we believe not to any extent.

The arrival of three Ships from Bombay and one from Manila was reported yesterday. The former bring however no news, having been anticipated by the overland dispatches via Calcutta, brought by the Waterwitch. The Walmer Castle touched at Batavia, where she left on the 27th December, without however adding so our stock of news, latest dates from Europe being there to the 22d August, and from United States to 5th September only.

The Caledonia was to follow the Walmer Castle in a few days being the only vessel in Batavia bound for China. Rice by the last advices was cheap and abundant in Batavia, being about 1.8 per Picul on board. Commercial advices from Manila quote Rice a. 1⅛ @ and Sugar 4½ @.

BORNEO.

From Earl's Archipelago.

The west coast of Borneo, from the mouth of the Sambas River to Point Datu, the N.W. extremity, with the exception of the Dyak town of Serawak, is very little known, even to the Malays. No extensive river has been found there, and as the Dyak tribes which inhabit the banks of the numerous creeks have not yet been tamed by communication with foreigners, and are always in want of human heads, the native traders have no inducement to visit these districts in the furtherance of their commercial pursuits.

The town of Serawak is situate in a bay to the eastward of Point Api, at the foot of a range of mountains from one thousand five hundred to three thousand feet high, extending toward the interior of the island. The rapidity with which Serawak has risen to importance, proves how very little encouragement the natives require to induce them to turn the valuable productions of the island to account. Soon after the establishment of Singapore, some people from Borneo Proper, who had touched at Serawak to procure water, on their voyage to the settlement, brought with them a large lump of metal ore which they had picked up there. This, after puzzling the Chinese for some time, was stumbled upon by some English gentlemen, who discovered it to be antimony ore of a very superior quality. On learning that this commodity would be purchased at a good price by the merchants of Singapore, the Rajah of Borneo Proper sent a small party of his people to Serawak, and a friendly intercourse was soon established with the Dyaks, who brought down large quantities of the ore, which they exchanged for beads, red cloth, iron, &c. Soon afterwards, the Malay chiefs of Sambas, who were glad of an opportunity of carrying on a commerce free from the control of the Dutch, purchased two or three brigs and ships, which they employed in the trade, and in a few years the annual importation of antimony ore at Singapore amounted to one thousand four hundred tons

The ore, which is called, I believe, foliated antimony, is found either on, or immediately under, the surface of the ground, and is to be obtained with so much facility, that a hundred tons may be exchanged with the Dyaks for goods to the amount of little more than the same number of dollars. The ore is readily purchased at from sixteen to twenty dollars per ton, by the merchants of Singapore, who transmit it in its crude state to England. As the goods exported from Singapore are chiefly of a light description, the antimony are proves very useful as ballast for ships; the freight to Europe is therefore very low, rarely exceeding thirty-five shillings per ton *

* The Malays of Sambas are in the habit of painting flowers on their dresses with a preparation of antimony ore, which imparts to the cloth a bright and permanent steel colour. As the natives, though they prefer dark colours, are fond of giving their dresses as gay an appearance as possible, clothes thus adorned are much valued, but the labour of painting renders them too expensive, for any but the rich. Antimony has never, I believe, been used in England for dyeing; its employment for this purpose by the Malays may therefore afford a hint to the merchants of Manchester and Glasgow, who export cotton goods to the Indian Archipelago.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

Cotton Manufactures.—The demand continues good for Long-cloths. For Cotton Yarn, except the very best quality, there is no sale except at a very great sacrifice.

Woollens.—Two or three parcels have been sold during the week, but without any advance in price. The market for Longells, is more quiet, and a decline of 10 @ 20 cents is spoken of, from one or two lots of scarlet and assorted colors being thrown into the market.

Rice,—is rather inclined to advance, rain being much wanted for the next crop.

Straits Produce.—Betelnut, Pepper, and Tin, have advanced a little, but there is not much demand.

Cotton.—There has been a little more enquiry within the last day or two, particularly for Bengal Cotton, the quantity of that description being so small, and about 1000 bales being required for junks proceeding to Chin-chew. Good Madras and Bombay is also more saleable, but for the inferior kinds there is no improvement. The Walmer Castle from Bombay is the only arrival during the week.

Opium.—The Lintin deliveries, up to the 8th instant, were reported at Patna, 122; Benares, 31; Malwa, 182; total, 335 chests, which must include the deliveries in the foreign boats, as the quantity taken away from the ships by the mandarin boats and smugglers is said to be very small. A seizure of upwards of 90 chests was made a few days since in the neighbourhood of Macao from one of the small boats, and one or two have occurred in the river of a few chests, which renders that mode of delivery very dangerous. Prices are consequently nearly nominal.

EXPORTS.

Raw Silk.—No further supplies have yet arrived, and the quality of what remains being generally inferior, and held at high prices, there have been no transactions lately to any extent.

Tea.—We do not hear of many purchases during the week, tonnage for England still continuing scarce.

CHINESE DOCTRINE OF FATE.

From the Indo Chinese Gleaner.

(Concluded from our last.)

The SHOU-KING says—"(The ways of) heaven are hard to be credited; and fate is not constant."—It also says—"Fate does not always bind us,"—I now see that these are not vain words. By the various circumstances, just related, I am convinced that what is called happiness and misery, are the sole results of our own efforts. These were sayings of the immaculate sages. With respect to the common proverb. "Misery and happiness wholly depend on the decree of heaven,"—that is the reasoning of a vulgar age! What your destiny may be, is unknown. But suppose (that you were told before hand) that you were destined to glory and honor, yet you ought con tinually to maintain the depressed thoughts of a man in low circumstances. Suppose you were destined to ease and gain, still maintain the views of one whose schemes and purposes have been thwarted. Suppose you were destined to present competence, still think yourself a poor man. Suppose you were destined to be loved and venerated, still cherish fear in the mind. Suppose your family were destined to be noble, and the hope of ages, still preserve the mind of one in humble life. Suppose you were destined to attain a high place of literary eminency, still preserve the sober views of an ignorant rustic. Exert your thoughts to your remote ancestors, and greatly cherish virtue. Concentrate your thoughts on your more immediate parents and cover their faults. Turn your thoughts upward, and recompense the fathers of the government. Turn your thoughts downward, and promote the happiness of your families. Turn your thoughts outward, and help those that are in need. Turn your thoughts inward, and repress your own depravity. Be daily sensible of your errors, and daily reform them. He who is a day without conviction of error, rests a day in the consciousness of being right. (Still that is but a negative good;) for although it was a day in which there was not a step advanced. In the world, there are not a few intelligent persons of well cultivated talents, who by two words, YIN-SIN. (i. e. ex-negligence) impede the fortunes of their whose future life.

The doctrine of YUN-KUH, master of repose, respecting the establishment of a good destiny (by one's own efforts) is most essential,—non sublime,—most faithful,—most correct! He who fully knows it, and delights therein, acts accordingly, and does not slacken."*

From this Essay, European readers will draw various and discordant inferences, according to their different principles, degrees of information, and modes of thinking. Most will agree in admitting that there is something amiable in its pagan author, and no small portion of good sense in his reasonings—while many will lament, that his information concerning the government of the world, seems so scanty, and that his views could not rise higher than to things that perish.

The form of the original composition discovers a coherence of parts, and preserves a connection of thought, which are not often met with in Chinese writings of this description. The author, after a brief account of himself, proceeds to shew the effect of certain principles on his own mind and conduct. For many years he was a believer in the doctrine of immutable Fate. His faith extinguished emulation, paralyzed effort, induced apathy, and led to the final resolution, that, as he could not mend the matter, he would save himself the trouble of trying. A change in his views and feelings, hopes and fears, takes place. He traces its progress; and points out those by whose instrumentality it was effected. He is roused to action. New principles take possession of his heart. He pursues a new line of conduct. He appeals to the writings of the ancient sages for the proof of those doctrines he had embraced. Finally, he concludes with a practical address to the reader, and pronounces an eulogy on the doctrines of YUN-KUH. The Essay seems to have been composed with the view of counteracting the general belief of his countrymen in the doctrine of Fate; and of lessening the credit of fortune tellers. He wished to convince them of the importance of exerting themselves in the use of proper means, and of guarding against that despondency of mind, which, under a pressure of misfortunes, the doctrine of destiny is calculated to produce.

But his system goes a great way to exclude the deity from the government of the world. By teaching men to take all their concerns into their own hands, and to depend on themselves alone, he imposes on them a burden to which mortal strength is unequal; and leads them to indulge ideas of self importance, which are not very becoming those "whose foundation is in the dust—and who are crushed before the moth."

His views are all earthly. He could rise no higher than the world. His repentance, his prayers, his reformation, his circumspection, and his virtue, were all mercenary—all for fame, promotion, and posterity. His character, drawn by his own pen, suits the description given of the Gentile nations by Jesus, as exactly as if it had been given for him alone.—"For all these things do the Gentiles seek."

SERVUS.

* From the KING-SIN-LUK.

MAULMAIN.

By the brig Elizabeth, from Rangoon, we have received some letters from that place and from Maulmain. It appears that the Burmese Governor of Martaban, the town directly opposite to Maulmain, had songs sung at a public festival, grossly abusing the English and boasting that the Burmese would go and destroy Maulmain. Reports also are being daily brought into Maulmain; stating that the Burmese are assembling a force at various place in the vicinity and making warlike preparations. Our correspondent adds, 'Now, all these reports may appear very silly and unworthy of being listened to; but combining them with the hasty departure of the Governor-General from Calcutta (which is very likely to be construed into a flight by the Burmese) I verily believe, that something is intended against Maulmain. What that is; it is difficult to say. It may be merely to alarm our people by spreading reports, or to try our firmness, whether our affairs in India are really in such a precarious state as to make us run away from hence on the approach of a hostile force—or, lastly, a real attack may be contemplated. The idea of an attack on Maulmain, however, seems to me so wild and so extravagant, that it requires a concentration of one's powers to look on the other side—our apparent timid and spiritless policy—the ignorance of the King and his advisers—his inflated pride—the flattery of all around him—the example of Alompra, who seized a throne and then conquered the former conquerors of the Burmese—the long time allowed the King for arming, and his present state of fancied power and preparation. You may imagine there is no little alarm and anxiety among our native population—thanks to a policy that will not notice an insult unless it be followed up by a blow. Our Government will find out one of these days the value of the old adage, 'a stitch in time will save nine.'

Our correspondents at Rangoon writes, that a report had been brought down from Koukmoung, stating that the King intends to acknowledge our treaties so soon as his other affairs are settled, but that the last intelligence from Calcutta, which would soon reach the King, was calculated to do much mischief. It was that the Governor-General does not much regard the King's disavowal of our treaties so long as the Burmese commit no aggression, and that as yet, our Government is of opinion it has no cause to quarrel with the King.—Bengal Hurkaru, Jan. 8.

BURMESE WAR.

The notice in the Hurkaru of yesterday, does not in our opinion justify the conclusion, that, because all was quiet at Sandoway on the 23d, the information given by the Courier of the day before, that an attack was expected, is to be looked upon as unfounded. The statement there made is positive, and refers to orders issued —under a conviction that a hostile attempt was about to be made by a body of troops, in number 5,000—for the reinforcement of a post in the direction whence the attack was anticipated. Still less do we think that the circumstance of nothing having occurred up to the 23d, is any guarantee that the desire to assail us has been crushed by our apparent state of preparation; though it may very well be that, finding us more on the alert than was imagined, the commencement of hostilities has been postponed till the first blow may be brought to fall upon some quarter, where it shall appear to be less looked for. The very fact (and we cannot doubt the Courier's information given as it is by an individual immediately concerned) that such a Burmese force had assembled in the neighbourhood, points out the real spirit that is at this moment agitating the court of Ava: and when put in connection with Col. Burney's departure, and the accounts—hitherto uncontradicted—of the king's disposition, we really do believe that it is intended to seize the first opportunity of assailing us wherever the least prospect of success may entice the nation to an encounter. Although in the last war victory carried our standards almost to the very gates of Ummerapoora, the events of the campaign were frequently so chequered, the sufferings and privations of our troops were so great, (and this can hardly be unknown to the Burmans) that we much fear a lesson was not inflicted sufficient to lower the pride and self consequence of the nation. It is not over readily, that the natives of India ascribed their defeats to the ordinary causes which constitute success on one side, and disaster on the other, under any circumstances—never was there a people more hard to conviction, that they have been beaten in fair fight, without the intervention of some occurrence so flattering to their amour propre as to half excuse, in their own ideas, the reverses they sustain; and where they can point to any thing like a temporary advantage, the occasion is invariably seized to swell it into importance, as a proof that they are able to cope successfully against us. Thus Bourtpore was, for years, the rallying point of all the dissatisfied and turbulent in Hindostan. The retreat of Monson and the passage of the Beas were long cast in our teeth as incontrovertible examples of superiority, without the least consideration of the causes that led to the failures in either instance; and now also, we doubt not, this vanity, so common to all the races of India, will induce the Burmese to regard themselves as a yet unconquered people —as men who, if they ultimately quailed,—did not do so till they had inflicted the severe t wounds, and had taught us to believe, that their courage and their climate combined, were obstacles not to be lightly opposed by a Government which had received some unpleasant experience of both. Viewing matters in this light, we think it by no means improbable that our next intelligence may be decidedly hostile in character. Our wish is that we may find ourselves mistaken; but we do not suppose that the nation has yet been sufficiently humbled to look upon the issue of a second contest as hopeless. The position of the Burmese (now) resembles, to our thinking, that of the Nepalese at the opening of the second Goorka campaign. Notwithstanding the compulsory cession of large territorial tracts, and their evident inability to secure more than a temporary advantage over our troops, there were unhappily so many instances of successful enterprize in various quarters, that it required the concentration of great power upon a given point, and the application of our best means to the wise resolution of a direct attack upon the capital, before we were able to deal them such a blow as has not failed to produce the desired effect, from that time to this. Just such we take to be the feeling and position of the Burmese—with this essential difference however, that there can be no comparison between the military character of the the two nations—and if we are forced into a war, we trust—or it will be humanity in the end—that similar steps will be taken to secure an equally speedy and triumphant result.—Daily News 7th December.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NEW PRINTING PRESS.—One of our most ingenious mechanics, Mr. Thomas Trench, has invented a new printing press, which will eclipse every thing of the kind heretofore put in operation. It is intended for stereotype plates, and will work off 50 reams of paper, of mammoth size, per day. It is intended to be attached to paper mills, and will print as fast as any mill can manufacture the paper. The register, by a simple revolution, can easily be changed, and made perfect. We have now a sheet in our office, worked on this new press, 26 feet long, printed on both sides at a time, in a quarter of a minute. The sheet contains two books of 163 pages each. The cost of a first-rate press, on this principle, will not exceed 1,000 dollars.—New York Evening Post.

MINIMUM OF WIT.—A gentleman, being asked by a friend 'what it was o'clock?' replied 'Little or nothing.' 'How so?' asked the inquirer. 'Why, said the wit, 'it is not quite one, and that is less than one and must be little or nothing.'

The year 1836 was less productive in a literary point of view in France than its immediate predecessors. In 1835, 82,298 sheets of type were composed for the French booksellers; in 1836 only 79 248 showing a diminution of nearly 300 sheets. The printed sheets have decreased in a still greater proportion, smaller editions having mostly been worked; so that we may assume that there were printed last year 25 million sheets less than in 1835. The greatest diminution has taken place in theological; political publications have rather increased than decreased.

The tribunal of commerce in Paris has decided, that an author who sells a work to a bookseller is bound to deliver the manuscript in a legible state, and to provide himself for the correction of the proofs.

GERMANY.—Each succeeding Catalogue of the Leipsig Fair is more bulky than its predecessor. That of the late Easter Fair forms a volume of 26 sheets, and contains 4353 new works, or new editions. Of these 449 were published abroad leaving for Germany (including Switzerland, Hungary, and that part of Prussia not belonging to the German confederation) 3291. In the total number there are,

Books and pamphlets in the German language	3200
Books and pamphlets in the ancient languages	402
Books and pamph. in living foreign languages	539
Novels	144
Plays	23
Musical publications	42
Maps	103

Of the above 239 are translations from foreign languages (among the novels alone 44) and 349 periodicals.

The whole were produced by 561 publishers, of whom Basse of Quedlinburg furnished 92 works, Reitzel of Copenhagen 82, Reimer of Berlin 53, the house of Metzler in Stuttgart 46, that of Arnold in Dresden 45, that of Cotta in Stuttgart 44, Brockhaus of Leipsig 42, Friedlein of Leipsig 41, Voigt of Weimar 40.

The principal states of Germany contributed in the following proportions to the general amount:—Austria, 266, (in Vienna alone, 165); Prussia, 1151, (in Berlin, 423); Bavaria, 409; Saxony, 669, (Leipsig alone, 558); Hanover, 106; Wurtemberg, 331; Baden, 136; the Hessian states, 141; Holstein, 40; the four Saxon duchies, 160; Brunswick, 55; Frankfurt, 58; Hamburg, 123.

TURKEY.—A society has just been formed at Constantinople with the title of "Society of Useful Knowledge." It intends to publish a monthly journal, called "The Journal of Useful Knowledge." The editor, who accompanied the youths sent to Paris to receive a French education, intends to found this publication on the same plan as the French work with the like title.

The Sultan has also sent for a French scholar to direct a class for teaching the French language at Constantinople, at the expense of the government.

SALE OF THEATRICAL PROPERTY.—Mr. Charles Kemble's theatrical property was sold yesterday by auction. The following will afford an idea of the price the property sold for:—A handsome dress suit for Lord Townley, with silk velvet breeches and gold tissue waistcoat, 28s.; a Faulconbridge's second dress, a magnificent suit of armour, 27s; Othello's dress of silk velvet, most splendidly worked with silver tissue, and shawl, 12, Leicester's dress, a fancy suit, most expensively enriched with beads and gold lace, in satin and velvet, with a magnificent satin cloak to correspond, 3l. 10s., costing originally, we believe, the sum of 50l. A wardrobe, originally the property of Sir Walter Scott, and rendered doubly interesting by a lyrical remembrance of its valuable services, written by Sir Walter, and presented with the chest, was bought at 23 guineas. —Evening paper.

AN ITALIAN PRACTITIONER.

It is very much in the style of Italian finesse to let a deceit work its own way. An English gentleman at Florence had a fall from his horse. Besides some slight bruises, he felt great pain in one of his thumbs; the pain was soon attended with inflammation; and the surgeon continued to dress this thumb, after the other hurts were cured. One day, he being obliged to be absent, his son attended.—"Have you visited the Signor Inglese?" said the father to the son in the evening.—"Yes, I have drawn out the thorn, and—"—"Blockhead that thou art," said the father; "then there is an end to the shop!"

VALUABLE EVIDENCE.

During the last assizes, in a case of assault, where a stone had been thrown by the defendant, the following evidence was drawn out of a Yorkshireman:—"Did you see the defendant throw the stone?"—"I saw a stone, and Pre pretty sure the defendant threwed it."—"Was it a large stone?"—"I should say it were a largeish stone."—What was its size?"—"I should say a sizeable stone."—Can't you answer definitely how big it was?"—"I should say it were a stone of some bigness."—"Can't you compare it to some other object?"—"Why, if I war to compare it, so as to give some notion of the stone, I should say it were as large as a lump of chalk!"

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

(From the 'Pickwick Papers.')

It was getting dark; that is to say, a few gaslights were kindled in this place (the Fleet prison), which was never light, by way of compliment to the evening, which had set in outside. As it was rather warm, some of the tenants of the numerous little rooms, which opened into the gallery on either hand, had set their doors ajar. Mr. Pickwick looked into them, as he passed along, with great curiosity and interest. Here, four or five great hulking fellows, just visible through a cloud of tobacco smoke, were engaged in noisy and riotous conversation over half-emptied pots of beer, or playing at all-fours with a very greasy pack of cards. In the adjoining room, some solitary tenant might be seen, poring, by the light of a feeble tallow candle, over a bundle of soiled and tattered papers, yellow with dust and drooping to pieces from age, writing, for the hundredth time, some heartrending statement of his grievances, for the perusal of some great man whose eyes in small scrap readers are whose heart it would never touch. In a third, a man, with his wife and a whole crowd of children, might be seen making up a scanty bed on the ground, set on a few chairs, for the younger ones to pass the night in; and in a fourth, and a fifth, and a sixth, and a seventh, the noise, and the beer, and the tobacco-smoke, and the cards, all came over again in greater force than before. In the galleries themselves, and more especially on the staircases, there lingered a great number of people, who came there, some because their rooms were empty and lonesome; others because their rooms were full and hot: and the greater part because they were restless and uncomfortable, and not possessed of the secret of exactly knowing what to do with themselves. There were many classes of people here, from the labouring man in his fustian jacket to the broken-down spend-thrift in his shawl dressing-gown, most appropriately out at elbows; but there was the same air about them all—a kind of listless, gas lit'd, careless swagger; a ragabondish who's-afraid sort of bearing, which is wholly indescribable in words; but which any man can understand in one moment, if he wishes, by just setting foot in the nearest debtors' prison, and looking at the very first group of people he sees there, with the same interest as Mr. Pickwick did.—"It strikes me, Sam," said Mr. Pickwick, looking over the iron-rail at the state-head—"it strikes me, Sam, that imprisonment for debt is scarcely any punishment at all."—"Think not, Sir?" inquired Mr. Weller.—"You see how these fellows drink, and smoke, and roar," replied Mr. Pickwick. "It's quite impossible that they can mind it much."—"Ah, that's just the worry thing, Sir," rejoined Sam, "they don't mind it; it's a regular holiday to them—all porter and skittles. It's the 'fortner vous as gets done over with the rest o' things: them down-hearted fellers as can't orig arap at the beer, nor play skittles neither—them as would pay if they could, and gets low by being boxed up. I'll tell you wot it is, Sir, them as is always a idlin' in public houses it don't damage at all, and them as is always a workin' can they can, it damages too much. It's snakish," as my father used to say ven his grog worn't made half-and-half.—"It's snakish, and that's the fault on it."

CALCUTTA OPIUM SALE.

The effect of the fall in the price of Opium on the Revenue may be seen by the following comparative statements for the January sales of 1837 and 1838.

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.
1837 Behar	4979	1565	1365	1413	5 7
Benares	1391	1569	1430	1439	13 7
Half Chests	4	730		730
1838 Behar	4533	818	750	781	11 11
Benares	2385	750	665	690	15 7

In the former year the proceeds of the sale were Co's Rs. 1,08,27,625—in the present Co's Rs. 51,58,750 derived from 6963 chests and 6917 respectively; showing a difference of Co's Rs. 57,66,455. The profit however to the Company is still above 30 lakhs, taking the cost at or about 350 Rs. per chest.—Harkaru.

Prices of Malwa Opium are stated to be gradually falling, being for present delivery 800 and for delivery in February 830 Rs. per chest.

Cotton.—Has been less enquired for during the week, but prices have undergone no material change. On our returns we find a purchase of 500 bales of Broach at Rs. 121 per Candy, and some small parcels of Gogo have changed hands at Rs. 105 @ 106 Rs. per Candy. The reports from the different districts of the coming crop are favorable.

Freight to China rather scarce at 19 @ 20 Rs. per Candy.

The following extract from Chitty on Bills has been sent to us, with a view to its publication, it being desirable that the law in such cases should be well understood.

"The custom of merchants is stated to be that, "if the drawer of a Bill of Exchange a second before "the day when the bill is due, the holder may "protest it to have better security for the payment, "and should give notice to the drawer and endor- "sers of the absconding of the drawee, and if the "acceptors of a foreign bill become bankrupt be- "fore it is due, it seems that the holder may also "in such case protest for better security; but the "acceptor is not on account of the bankruptcy of "the drawer compelled to give this security. The "neglect to make this protest, will not affect the "holders remedy against the drawer and endorser, "and his principal use appears to be that by giving "notice to the drawer and endorsers of the situa- "tion of the acceptor, by which it is become im- "probable that payment will be made, they are "enabled by other means to provide for the bill "when due, and thereby prevent the loss of re ex- "change, &ca. occasioned by the return of the bill. "It may be collected, that though the drawer or en- "dorsers refuse to give better security, the holder "must nevertheless wait till the bill be due before "he can sue either of those parties."

Remarks upon the Chinese Government.

From a Correspondent.

It is an object worthy of the deepest research to ascertain how this Government, which has with few alterations stood the test of ages, is actually constituted. In this investigation we do not intend to expatiate upon its theoretical structure, which may be safely put on record, but simply to dwell on its practical tendency.

Nobody will for a moment hesitate to admit, that China is the most populous country in the world. An immense population, exceeding in many districts the means of subsistance, reveres with slavish submission its superiors. There is neither a military force to keep these masses in awe, nor any other power to control the myriads. The present tranquillity under foreign rulers can not be ascribed to a numerical ascendancy, for the Mantchous are a handful, compared with the Chinese, nor to a military despotism, because they have been long ago enervated and become as weak as the conquered. The only conclusion to which we arrive is, that the existing Government is in unison with the actual state of the nation, and though not upheld by public opinion, a thing unknown in China, yet strengthened by immemorial usage. More than a Prussian drill sergeant could ever effect by the most persevering efforts, the Chinese institutions have done in modelling the nation. Moulded and fashioned by the plastic hand of Confucius and sundry other sages, bridled by minute and often vexatious laws, and partly under the influence of the stern law of necessity, the Chinese have become what they now are. Instead of feeling the constraint put upon them, they rather revere the institutions by which they were reduced to such condition. Habit taught them to be content with what their forefathers possessed, and to hate improvement as dangerous innovation. The Government is naturally very careful to perpetuate such a system, and guards vigilantly against any inroachment. Other nations, as for instance the Spaniards, have adopted similar measures in order to produce the same results; yet, though more vigorous in the execution of the design, the spirits to be subdued were too powerful; instead of mute submission, anarchy ensued, and on the ruins of inquisitorial dungeons, a spirit bidding defiance to laws, both human and divine, reared proudly its head. In many Europeon states the same method is still applied with more or less success, but we apprehend, the end will be utter discomfiture. Yet in China despotism in its perfection, has triumphed over all obstacles, and we shall inva in seek for a country, where a subject knows so little about his rights, and so thoroughly his duties.

In points not essential, the Chinese government is more complaisant to the nation, than the most democratic administration. Instead of presenting a bold front to the overwhelming force of multitudes, the government temporizes and rather imitates the willow than the sturdy oak. The grand maxim is always to keep matters in a quiet state at every risk, and to use every possible means for tranquillizing the people. In a general insurrection, the government does not immediately draw the sword to cut the rebels down, but patiently waits until the first fury has subsided, and then, instead of open defiance, endeavors to gain over the leaders and to neutralize their efforts. Dire is the vengeance taken upon the few delivered up to justice in order to expiate the sins of the whole number; yet the storm is hushed, and the mandarins enjoy all the satisfaction of having atchieved this great object by their management. A report descriptive of the heroism of the military, displayed on such an eventful occasion, is immediately drawn up and published in the Peking Gazette. Though it may contain not a single word of truth, or though facts and lies be artfully blended together, yet their statement entirely supersedes a faithful relation of events, and is inserted in the historical annals. The Government never loses in respectability by compromise or concessions, for whatever is put on record redounds to its honor, the soldiers are warriors on paper, and the generals far exceed Cæsar and Alexander both in their valour and wisdom. Invincible and undaunted, they carry all before them, they do not defeat rebels and enemies, but annihilate them. It ought here at the same time to be remarked that a Chinese army is sent to conquer or to die, and that the stern law decrees death to every one who flies before an enemy; this is on record.—The reports sent in to the supreme government must therefore be in accordance with this regulation.

A question very naturally arises, how a government with so many millions of subjects, does not maintain a respectable army in pay, in order to ensure the malcontents. We simply answer, that this would be against old custom, a reason always satisfactory to every true Chinaman; but old custom again has its antecedents. Here we remark, that the Chinese government as well as nation are actuated by a spirit of economy which may well serve as a pattern to other states. Necessity has been the instructor, there can be no waste of things, where so many mouths must be fed; a numerous army would exhaust the resources of the land, and be the cause of leaving many people destitute. The experiment has been tried but the government found to its own cost, that soldiers devoured more than locusts, and that a large class of the people must be reduced to want, in order to supply their necessities. Another evil, still more formidable, likewise arose, viz military despotism and loss of power to the supreme government. In an empire so extensive as China, a standing army in a distant province entirely devoted to its commander, may prove very dangerous. The civil power must necessarily bow before the strength of armies. Such a state of things is uncongenial to the Chinese nation and would be destructive of its most cherished institutions. As however, the military is a necessary appendage to a state, soldiers were kept for performing the offices of our police. To render them as harmless as possible the very dregs of the people were enlisted on a paltry allowance, and the use of arms not allowed them in time of emergency. Military officers were put far below the civilians, and in fact made their very servants, who had always to obey their call. To remove finally every fear of a three martial spirit, lands were allotted to the soldiers, and thus the soldiers habituated to exchanging the plough-share for the sword, during the greater part of the year. Though the lists were nearly swelled to 1 700,000 men, yet the number of soldiers actually in service, was perhaps not a sixth part of those on paper. Such are the results to which this present dynasty has come; though it owe from its very beginning a military character.

V.

BRITISH AND CHINESE INTERCOURSE.

The object of this series of papers, of which the present is the last, was to lay before our readers the actual state of the British trade with China as far as it's action on the nation, to promote a more liberal intercourse is concerned. We have, we believe, shewn, from either experience, that to diplomatic intercourse with China we are by no means indebted for the trade we now carry on, but have established on the other hand that the foreign trade is of paramount necessity to a great number of the Chinese population. We have moreover, and, we think, satisfactorily proved that we cannot expect any cooperation from the officers of government to aid us in effecting, officially, any change in the manner in which trade is at present carried on, or in the way in which foreigners pursuing that trade, are at present treated. We have shewn that the Government, availing itself probably of the impression the first Europeans, landing on the shores of China, made on the timid and peaceable Chinese, has singled us out for objects of compassion or charity, as coming from afar to participate in the bounty from the Celestial empire, and as such has only suffered us without giving any right whatever to trade or reside in the ports of the Celestial Empire. We have pointed out to our readers of what nature the complaints are we justly entertain against the Chinese Government, as affecting our personal liberty and prerogatives as merchants equally beneficial to ourselves and to the country we visit. We have ultimately recommended to commerce to push its way into the ports of China, regardless of the pompous prohibitions of the Government of Peking, and think that merchants would be certain of being well received by the nation, and their trade probably connived at by the mandarins.

Though we are convinced that Commerce will successfully establish it's empire all over China, yet ere this be accomplished, many years may pass away, and meanwhile the trade carried on by foreigners in Canton remains exposed to the vexations already enumerated, and the property of British merchants exposed to the caprice and bad faith of Mandarines and Hong-merchants. Our persons remain liable to insult, and yet we have no protection whatever from the Government at home which, instead of providing such protection, which it is not improbable may be, at times, of the utmost importance to the British residents in Canton, contents itself with passing a bill through Parliament for appointing a Court of Justice in China with Admiralty jurisdiction, which Court is not only to take cognizance of differences between Englishmen and of offences committed by them, but it is also to be empowered to do justice to foreigners on their appeal to it against British subjects, and which foreigners, in an opposite case, would of course not acknowledge the jurisdiction of the Court. Instead, therefore, of assisting its subjects in China and protecting them, the British Government is about to place them on a more unfavorable footing than any other foreigners trading here, or even than the Chinese, who may, in this projected Court prosecute an Englishman, and possibly obtain an award against him, without that Englishman having in return the protection of law, should the Chinese become his debtor. In Turkey the British Ambassador has such kind of jurisdiction, but, if what we read of how it works, be true, it gives to malefactors under protection of the British crown the means of escaping without punishment, and in fact more frequently protects them from justice than administers it on them. The cause of this has been the inability of the court to carry it's sentence into execution, and on culprits being sent to the neighbouring courts of Malta or the Ionian Islands, these declared that they had no jurisdiction in the case brought before them and directed the prisoner to be discharged. It is probable that the result would here be similar, though with that great difference that such jurisdiction as the British Ambassador exercises in Turkey, is secured to England by treaty with that country, which is not now, nor is it likely to be, the case in China. In Turkey moreover turkish law-officers assist whenever any case between Frank and Turk is brought before the Ambassador, and a Frank there has, besides, the right to appeal to a turkish judge. Here we are altogether debarred from the protection of the law of the Empire, but are under laws and regulations specially provided against foreigners, and it is even probable that, should the British Government ever really attempt to establish a Court of justice, the Chinese Government would not permit it to exercise it's functions.

Embassies to Peking we consider of no use whatever, and experience has, as before observed, shewn us their utter inutility. What then is to be done to afford to the British trade in China the protection it may stand in need of? We would ask for nothing at present but a small squadron of British ships of war to be stationed in the China sea, and to, from time to time, touch at Lintin. If for instance a Frigate and two gunbrigs were appointed to this station, the gunbrigs might be employed in surveying the coasts, thus accustoming the Chinese to the sight of British men of war, and the Frigate, being frequently at Lintin would assure the sons of Han that the British were not so unprotected as they have hitherto deemed. We see no reason why the British government should not extend that protection to the China trade, which it affords for instance, to that of South-America, probably not one eigth part as valuable as that of China. Yet, on the coast of Peru and Chile you continually find British men of war, whilst to China they come only a angels visits, "few and far between." It is true a station off Lima is much more agreeable than one at Lintin, besides being profitable to Captains as giving them freight of specie, which here they probably would not have, but a small squadron, such as we have pointed out, would be of very great use, not only for the sake of the impression it would make on the Chinese, but also as affording actual protection in case of any serious difficulties with the Chinese, of which several causes combine to render an occurrence probable. Surely the British Government can spare a few ships of war to protect a trade that gives it a yearly revenue of four Millions of Sterling, a revenue greater than any it receives from the trade of any other individual country, and which yet seems to be as little cared for by the Government as if it did not exist, whilst we see attention lavished on the safety and protection of trade in other places not a tithe of the value of ours.

By the Hero of Malone from Bombay the overland despatches of August, September, and October have been received, but without adding to our stock of news, having been anticipated by the Waterwitch from Calcutta.

The Pekoe, from Liverpool, 23d September has also arrived.

The important arrival of the week is the Antonio Pereira from Calcutta, left the Sandheads on the 14th January. She brings the account of the first Opiumsale, at which prices have gone lower even than antipated, having averaged C. R. 781—for Patna, and 691 for Benares, an attempt to keep up prices at the beginning, possibly to favour Bombay contracts for Malwa Opium, having proved unsuccessful. After the sale some resales have been made at a profit of about 30 Rs. per chest. We give among the extracts the result of the sale as compared with last year's. We congratulate the Calcutta speculators in this article on having been so cautious this time, as it will certainly require very low prices here to realize the large production of India. Besides this we do not find any news of interest in the Calcutta papers and are disappointed in not finding Europe news by the overland November mail. These were daily expected in Bombay per Hugh Lindsay, and business is represented in Calcutta as very flat indeed owing to the non-arrival of the expected advices from England. No Singapore papers as far as we can learn have been received per Antonio Pereira, they having probably been forwarded per Red Rover, which vessel, on her way from Calcutta touched at Singapore on the 26th January, five days before the Pereira left that port, but is now reported in, though the letters by her have not yet (Friday night) been received. The Rob Roy was to have left Calcutta a day after the Pereira. By the Ruby, Antonio Pereira, Red Rover, and Rob Roy, about 3,600 chests of the new Opium are expected to be brought.

The Opium trade. We have several times alluded to the difficulties encountered by the Mandarins at Lintin against deliveries of Opium there, in consequence of which but part of the trade is now transacted at Lintin. A great proportion of it has been driven to the coasts both east and west of the Lemma, and not a small portion has made its way up the river itself, being there carried on in small sailing boats, the centre of whose operations seems latterly to have been Whampoa, but they even came as far as Canton, without the Government officers for some time, seeming to pay any attention to them, or without attempting their suppression. Success seems, however, to have rendered those engaged in this trade bolder, and less afraid of exposure, and several seizures of the drug have, in consequence, taken place on the river, and bonfires been made of at least part of the seized Opium. That the Chinese at times destroy the drug after seizure having been made, a friend of ours had the other day an opportunity to witness, for, passing by the French Folly on his way to Whampoa, he saw a great many Chinese officers and soldiers round a large fire, the smoke of which, being carried towards him by the wind, was strongly charged with the fumes of Opium. We should think however that but a small part of a seizure made would be devoted to destruction, the greater part no doubt enriches the captors.

These frequent interruptions and losses suffered by those engaged in this trade on the river are said to have reduced it considerably, it being moreover exposed to the fraudulent practices of the Chinese engaged in it who, in several instances, are said to have paid for the Opium in adulterated Sycee, thus causing a heavy loss to the sellers. We are sorry to see this trade to have become so frequent on the river, and to see Europeans personally engaged in it, which cannot but end in hostile rencontres with Mandarin boats, which probably, as being much more numerously manned, will not end to the advantage of Europeans, but must tend to convince the Chinese that their numbers will render it at any time easy for them to oppress the small number of foreigners cooped up in a corner of their country, and who are without any means of defence or protection from without. The commencement of hostilities between Mandarins and boats manned by foreigners, we regret to hear, has taken place at Whampoa, and a considerable sum of money was taken from a boat about a week since, which that boat had just received from a smuggler. The Chinese, we understand, had recourse to a stratagem which reminds us of the time when it was our task as school to translate Cornelius Nepos, where we remember to have read of the Greeks or Persians throwing earthen pots filled with venomous snakes on the decks of the opposing vessels, thus causing a panic among the crews, and their being easily murdered. The Chinese in default of snakes threw lighted crackers and squibs into the boat of the Europeans, which unusual manoeuvre, taking the crew by surprize, rendered the capture of the boat an easy prey to the mandarins.

After some time of quiet, as far as the local authorities are concerned, we have now again to report the issuing of another edict against the Opium ships at Lintin, threatening as before, a stoppage of the trade if the ships do not go away. The document is, we hear, similar to former ones of the same nature, and likely to meet with the same degree of obedience.

Medical Missionary Society in China. The first meeting of this society was held on Wednesday last at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, Wm. Jardine Esq. in the chair. Some time last year it was proposed to establish this society and to merge in it the Ophthalmic Hospital, hitherto under the able charge of the Revd. Doctor Parker. As correspondence with England and the United States was necessary to carry the objects of the Society into effect, its establishment was deferred until now, the preliminary arrangements having been made to the satisfaction of the Gentlemen here more immediately active in this enterprize. We should now lay before our readers a succinct account of the meeting and of the resolutions passed thereat, but are obliged to postpone this until next week, understanding, that owing to some verbal alterations, the papers are not yet quite ready for publication. We must therefore content ourselves for the present with giving a short outline of the objects of this institution, which promises to become of signal benefit to the suffering Chinese, and to cause the character of foreigners to be more appreciated. Mr. G. T. Lay, who attended the meeting for Doctor Colledge of Macao, briefly stated that the objects of the institution were to afford medical aid to the poor Chinese gratuitously, and to follow out a plan of affording them this relief already so successfully begun by Doctors Colledge and Parker, the former at Macao and the latter in the Ophthalmic Hospital of Canton. The object in proposing to name this institution, the Medical Missionary Society, was chiefly to enlist in its favor the powerful and benificent Missionary Societies in the United States and England, with whom the projectors here had already entered into correspondence and at whose charge it is expected medical men will be sent out here. The funds of the society are limited to pay for the premises necessary for the Hospital for medicines, and native assistance, if not being the plan of the society, at present, to remunerate the expenses of the medical gentlemen who may either offer their assistance to the establishment on their own account, or be sent out by any of the Missionary societies at home. It was expected that within the next 6 months several medical gentlemen would arrive here, sent out by these societies, and it was the intention of the society here to employ the services of such gentlemen only as brought sufficient credentials of their medical education, and of their moral and christian principles.

As we shall only give a short outline of the proceedings, we shall briefly state that the funds of the society have been created, and are to be supported, by donations and subscription. An annual subscription of $15 constitutes a member for the time of his subscription; a donation of $100 entitles the donor to be a member for life, and of $500 to be a member of the board of management for life.

The Committee of management is to consist of, a President, Vice Presidents, a treasurer, a recording and a corresponding secretary and an auditor, which offices were conferred on the following:

President,	T. R. Colledge Esq.
Vice Presidents,	Revd. Dr. P. Parker.
	Wm. Jardine Esq.
	Revd. E. C. Bridgman.
Corresponding Secretary,	C. W. King Esq.
Recording Secretary,	——
Treasurer, "	J. Archer Esq.
Auditor, "	J. C. Green Esq.

A plan of some premises at Macao was also submitted to the meeting, to propose to the Society acquiring them by purchase for a hospital at Macao. They are said to be in every way a most desirable property, at present belonging to Doctor Colledge, who offers them to the Society at the cost price, which we understood to be about $ 500 @, at which price it was thought the houses were very cheap and eligible.

Now in the Press,—and will be published in a few days, a pamphlet, entitled "The Chinese Security Merchants in Canton and their debts." The design of this publication is to make known the conditions upon which British and foreign merchants in Canton conduct their trade, with the hope to interest the public of Great Britain, especially the mercantile part of it, in the case, and to induce Her Majesty's Government to interpose with the Imperial Government of China, in order to obtain payment of certain debts owing by the Hong-merchants to foreigners. Printed and published at the Canton Press Office, price one dollar.

SHIPPING INTELLIGENCE.

ARRIVED—Brit. Peko, ——, from Liverpool, 25th September. Hero of Malone, ——, from Bombay 23d Novbr Antonio Pereira, Young, from Calcutta, left Sandheads 14th and Singapore 31st January, and arrived at Macao 20th February. Red Rover, Wright, from Calcutta and Singapore

PASSENGER—Per Peko, The Belgian Consul for Manila, Mr. Lennoy, Lady and child.

SAILED OR DESPATCHED.—Brit Copeland, Crawford, for Liverpool. Denison, Jones, for London. Amer. Eben Preble, Croker, for Boston.

The Manglrs, for Singapore and Bombay was finally despatched on Tuesday last, she having been detained at Lintin.

The report of the arrival of the Mary Dugdale, and Blake, from Bombay has proved erroneous, both vessels still keeping out.

The Cowasjee Family arrived at Singapore on the 19th, and sailed again for Calcutta on the 21st January.

The Lowjee Family had arrived in Bombay on the 28th December.

The Ruby left Calcutta a few days before the A. Pereira, for this.

The Waterwitch, Reynell, to be despatched in a few days.

We omitted to notice among the departures, that of the John Gilpin, Walsh, for South-America, which took place some weeks ago. The Eliza Stewart also had by mistake remained on our list of shipping at Whampoa after her despatch for London.

In lading for England; Marquis Camden, Duke of Sussex, Golconda, David Clarke

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS both white and grey have declined since our last fully half a dollar per Piece, and even at these rates the demand is dull, the dealers having heavy stocks and being alarmed at still further supplies. COTTON YARN, remains very depressed, except for good quality and suitable numbers.

WOOLLENS.—There is no improvement in this market. Several parcels of SPANISH STRIPES are in the market for which lower prices are offered than were previously current. CAMLETS are also very heavy of sale. LONGELLS, except scarlet, are rather lower, notwithstanding the very short supplies and that the holders appear firm.

METALS.—LEAD is dull of sale at 6½. IRON, the small rod maintains its price, but the bar is in little demand.

RICE,—has been more saleable at a little advance and it may be expected to improve still further, the low price having checked greatly importations.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—The market for PEPPER and BETELNUT is quite inactive; We do not hear of any quantity in first hands, but for moderate supplies our quotations could be obtained. TIN, is firmer.

COTTON.—The market for Bengal Cotton continues firmer, the stock being so very short, and there being, from the late accounts, little probability of any further supply for some time. In Bombay and the inferior kinds of Madras we have no improvement, good Tinnevelly is, however, more enquired for.

OPIUM.—There is no change in this trade; reports are afloat that the smuggling boats will be allowed to run a short time, but we do not place much faith in them and we believe it is only founded on the probability of the inferior mandarins being willing to try the experiment for their own benefit during the absence of the Viceroy, who leaves on his tour of inspection to morrow. Prices therefore continue quite nominal, and, for the causes stated in our last, the deliveries both in the river and outside have been very short; in addition to which the arrival of the Antonio Pereira and Red Rover with the new drug has put a stop to any operations. No price is yet named, but with so heavy a supply close at hand, holders will no doubt feel anxious to realise at any thing near prime-cost. We have received no report yet of the weight or quality of the new drug. The deliveries to the 15th were, Patna, 218; Benares, 44; Malwa, 283; Total 545 chests. Turkey, is quite nominal and the price will, in a great measure, be regulated by that of the other qualities.

EXPORTS.

RAW SILK.—No further supplies have yet arrived although daily expected. Some purchases have been made during the week of the middling cargo silk, we understand, at our quotations.

TEA.—A good deal of business has been done during the week and at advanced prices. Very little good Tea of any kind remains, and the same prices are now demanded for low qualities as were formerly current for the better descriptions. Low Hysons are plentiful.

COMMERCIAL REMARKS.

IMPORTS.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.—LONGCLOTHS both white and grey have declined since our last fully half a dollar per Piece, and even at these rates the demand is dull, the dealers having heavy stocks and being alarmed at still further supplies. COTTON YARN, remains very depressed, except for good quality and suitable numbers.

WOOLLENS.—There is no improvment in this market. Several parcels of SPANISH STRIPES are in the market for which lower prices are offered than were previously current. CAMLETS are also very heavy of sale. LONGELLS, except scarlet, are rather lower, notwithshanding the very short supplies and that the holders appear firm.

METALS.—LEAD is dull of sale at 6½. IRON, the small rod maintains its price, but the bar is in little demand.

RICE,—has been more saleable at a little advance and it may be expected to improve still further, the low price having checked greatly importations.

STRAITS PRODUCE.—The market for PEPPER and BETELNUT is quite inactive; We do not hear of any quantity in first hands, but for moderate supplies our quotations could be obtained. TIN, is firmer.
